Slash in Use Of Electric Light Asked By President

Appeal Is Issued In Order to Help Conserve Power For War's Demands

President Roosevelt appealed yesterday through the medium of the press to Government departments and the public to conserve every possible kilowatt of electric energy for war purposes.

The President explained to his press conference that he would save paper and other expenses of an executive order by letting the press carry his message throughout the country.

He revealed that he had received quite a number of complaints about Government buildings being lighted up unnecessarily.

What he said about Government buildings, he added, applied also to civilian use of electricity.

Excessive Demand

Asked about night baseball, the President pointed out that it should go on because it was useful to morale, and he added that if people who went to the games were careful to turn off all their lights before they left home there would be no increase in the amount of power used.

He admitted, however, that the blackout problem would have to be worked out locally with specific defense precautions in mind, since brightly lighted baseball parks would make good air-raid targets.

The President's appeal to conserve electric power lent force to the recent statement of the Federal Power Commission that power demands for defense purposes were exceeding provisions made for new generator plants.

Meanwhile, the War Production Board disclosed that it is considering issuing orders reducing the number of sizes of electric light bulbs by more than 50 per cent.

May Be Reduced to 1000

Officials explained that some 2500 different sizes of different types of bulbs now are used for home and store lighting, for flashlights, for radio and automobile panels, for advertising signs and other purposes. The industry has proposed, WPB said, that the number of sizes might be reduced to about 1000.

Each bulb contains such critical war materials as copper, brass, nickel and tungsten. The larger the number of sizes in production, officials said, meant larger inventories required by manufacturers, wholesalers and retailers, and larger stocks of critical materials tied up within the industry.

WPB said it had been suggested that only three voltages be produced by the industry—110, 115 and 125. Bulbs are now made for 105, 110, 115, 120, 125, 130 and 135 volts.

Cancer Victim's Appeal Brings Heavy Response

Memphis, Tenn., March 6 (AP).—Letters, visits and telephone calls brought a steady stream of suggestions today to a young cancer victim who has asked advice on how to spend the last months of his life.

W. L. Winsett, 36, who yesterday asked readers of the Press-Scimitar to help him decide how to use his time, said the advice and good wishes "have helped me lots."

He indicated he might follow the advice of many who urged him to go to a warmer climate, get away from everyday annoyances and try to relax.

Many people, Winsett said, advised him to "get out of life all you can until it ends." Some suggested the doctors who have told him he would die within a few months might be wrong.

$1,300,000 Cut From Farm Bill

The House yesterday cut $1,300,000 more from the Agriculture Department bill but the farm bloc defeated several other attempts to make reductions.

After returning from a European tour in 1931, Gen. Douglas MacArthur was determined to modernize the United States Army, which at that time had only seven tanks. His battle with Congress for money is told today by Bob Considine in chapter 13 of "MacArthur, the Magnificent." Page 12.

Strategic Areas Now Protected

Blacking Out U. S. Buildings Would Cost Million, FWA Says

By Christine Sadler
Post Staff Writer

If Uncle Sam should decide to blackout all the windows in his Government buildings, it would cost the taxpayers a million dollars for materials, the Federal Works Agency pointed out yesterday.

Officials are by no means convinced such an expenditure could be justified, especially in view of the fact that effective blacking out of strategic areas—such as communications centers, telephone switchboards, guard rooms, and staff offices at War, Navy and State departments—already has been accomplished.

Recommendations covering the extent to which the 391 Federal buildings in the District should be curtained probably will be contained in reports of an inter-departmental committe now studying the situation under direction of C. W. Barber, engineer with the Public Buildings Administration.

This committee has been going over blueprints and plans of all buildings, deciding on shelter areas, strategic points, and such. It is expected to report within the next few days.

Acting Federal Works Administrator Baird Snyder, concerned about criticism directed at Government buildings in the Tuesday night blackout, yesterday called attention to the fact that while the FWA has every intention of entering into the spirit of blackout tests the buildings were exempted Tuesday.

Administrator Baird said the Army and Navy has told FWA that in the event of an emergency they have blackout protection sufficient to permit them to operate. He pointed out that the following sums have been spent getting strategic spots blacked out: $4500 for Navy and Munitions, $1100 for State, $2000 for War Department and annexes, $5000 for the City Postoffice, $2300 for FBI rooms at Justice, $2000 for the Social Security Building, and $1000 at the central heating units.

These preparations were made immediately after December 7, he said, pointing out that floodlights noted on Government buildings or near them more likely than not are protection against sabotage.

Before the Budget Bureau now is an estimate calling for 28 million dollars for protective measures in Federal buildings throughout the country. Some of this amount, doubtless, will be used to complete blackout preparations—and, no

House Speeds U.S. Debt Limit Of 125 Billions

Morgenthau's Request Is Given Swift Action, But Tax Move Lags

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

A national debt limit of 125 billion dollars, designed to "frighten no one but our enemies," yesterday was unanimously approved by the House Ways and Means Committee and made the special order of House business today.

The 60 billion dollars added borrowing power was aped to the House floor after Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau told the committee it is urgently needed to finance the war to victory and "I'll be back within a year for another increase."

"Whatever the cost may be we are willing to face it," he said. "We are strong enough to bear it, and we know that it will be worth it in the end."

Chairman Robert L. Doughton immediately filed a report with the House calling the increase in the debt limit "imperative" as the Treasury within the month will run out of borrowing authority under the present 65 billion dollar limitation.

Tax Bill Faces Delays

But the committee was not so prompt to act on the Treasury's $9,610,000,000 tax program presented to Congress Tuesday and scheduled for extensive public hearings beginning Monday. Already a variety of proposed amendments were taking shape aimed at spreading the cost of war financing below the present bloc of taxpayers to which

Copper Waste Denied by WPB

War Production Board officials yesterday denied charges by a special House Military Agairs Subcommittee that they had wasted copper recklessly in authorizing a Rural Electrification Administration transmission line in Arkansas. They declared that at the cost of only 200 additional tons of copper they enabled transmission of 20,000 more kilowatts in a power-deficient defense area.

D. C. to Import Thousands for Housing Work

Completion of Jobs On Schedule Will Require More Labor

By Ben W. Gilbert
Post Staff Writer

Completion of schedule of the huge defense housing projects contemplated for metropolitan Washington this year will require the recruiting of thousands of building trades workers from other cities, The Post was informed today.

The enormous demand for such workmen has already resulted in a huge influx of carpenters, bricklayers, plumbers and other skilled craftsmen with scarcely any let-up in sight. Building trades union memberships have swelled with many formerly nonunion workmen receiving the highest wages in their careers.

John Locher, secretary of the A. F. of L. Building and Construction Trades Council, estimated that 10,000 workers would be employed on 14,500 dwelling units which are planned for the District before the end of the summer. While some of this number will be provided by the release of men from pending projects now being completed, many others will have to be brought in, he said.

Asks Labor Supply Survey

Meanwhile, Department of Labor officials took cognizance of the problem by requesting Locher to present a survey of the labor supply question involved in completing the defense housing when the hearing on building trades wages reconvenes Tuesday. Locher said he has requested contractors who have done similar work to prepare scientific estimates for the hearing.

The Labor Department called the hearing to determine "prevailing wages" on residential construction in the District area as required by the Davis-Bacon Act for the purpose of setting wages on Government construction of homes. This was regarded as a necessary preliminary to the start of work on the housing projects.

Money for 4500 demountable houses has already been allocated the Alley Dwelling Authority. A measure to appropriate 70 million dollars to build 10,000 defense homes

An Eyewitness Story

'Walk'—'Don't Walk' Mean Same to Capital Pedestrians

By Bill Brinkley
Post Staff Writer

The busy corner of Thirteenth and F Streets Northwest and certain other Washington intersections have red neon signs with the imperatives, "Walk" and "Don't Walk."

If you want to find out how much these commands are respected, stand at Thirteenth and F for a quarter of an hour and count.

In 15 minutes yesterday afternoon this reporter counted 220 persons walking on the "Don't Walk" sign.

This is a close-hand example of the "pedestrian carelessness" traffic officials are talking about. "Pedestrian carelessness" is furnishing a considerable number of unexpected funeral services in Washington, it's also on a serious increase.

Sometimes the people will go across in waves until there's a solid mass from curb to curb walking on the "Don't Walk" sign.

There's a definite technique by which these group advances are started.

One individual up front whose time is so important that the world will fall down if he doesn't save that five seconds or so, will look in a couple of directions. Seeing no cars coming, he will maybe look over his shoulders a couple of times, then start marching across. The other pedestrians, apparently

Island Cut in Two

By the Associated Press

Bandoeng, Java, March 6.—The Allied forces, approaching a state of exhaustion under the cruel, unending pressure of the enemy's overwhelming strength, fell back tonight into the rough interior for a last stand, abandoning to the Japanese much of western Java and Batavia itself, the imperial capital of all the Dutch East Indies.

Disaster fell as well upon the eastern half of the island, where the invader had driven almost to the southern coast with the capture of Jogjakarta, less than 15 miles from the sea, and thus had completed the utter destruction of communications westward from the Sourabaya naval base and was cutting Java in two.

It appeared that the main defending forces were withdrawing to the plateau about Bandoeng, the temporary capital and military headquarters, striking out doggedly with their last strength in wild rear-guard actions as they approached the hills of decision for this island.

(Radio Tokyo said Japanese planes have carried out another "mass raid" on Bandoeng, indicating that the Nipponese might be preparing to storm the Dutch mountain stronghold.)

Bone-tired as they were sleepless for days under the unbroken thunder of enemy bombing, the Dutch, Americans, Australians and British nevertheless desperately and momentarily snatched the initiative here and there.

One Sector Is Regained

At least one sector previously overrun by invaders was reported regained in Allied counterattacks, apparently in the rough arch being pressed down upon Bandoeng by the enemy from his earlier positions about 25 miles distant in three directions—from Poerwakarta to the northwest, Kalidjati to the north, and Soebang to the northeast.

(British news agency dispatches to London reported a strong frontal Dutch counterattack which had driven the enemy from a section of the plains of Bandoeng and stated

It Might Have Been Different

U. S. Bombers Kept Japs Out of Java a Week, Then Had to Quit for Lack of Fighter Support

By Harold Guard
United Press Staff Writer

Melbourne, March 6.—United States naval and air forces delayed the invasion of Java for a week by magnificent fighting, but American bombers had to abandon the island in its hour of direct need for lack of fighter-plane support.

That is the story of American participation in the battle of Java.

The most authoritative Dutch opinion when I left Java last Sunday morning was that the battle would resolve eventually into a siege of the Bandoeng Plateau, where the defenses are concentrated. Elsewhere the defenders will fight a delaying action and Java ultimately will fall a victim to the same evils of Malaya—a lack of air strength.

The Dutch will finally fight practically alone. They won't retreat because retreat is impossible. Only the Allies are retreating—withdrawing strategically because they have learned that "he who fights and runs away, will live to fight another day."

American fliers felt bitterly about having to leave Java in its hour of need, but they recognized the futility and peril of trying to operate bombers without adequate fighter support. I was told that a number of their bombers were picked off on the ground late last week by Japanese bombers and machine gunners, and when the expected American fighter plane support failed to arrive, withdrawal of the bombers was the only sensible course.

I left Djokja, on the southwest coast of Java, at 1 a. m. Sunday, for Bandoeng.

Friday I went to Allied headquarters, which no longer housed the Allied high command for the southwest Pacific, since Gen. Sir Archibald Wavell, the commander, moved out. Wavell had sought new quarters "from where we will be better able to prosecute the Pacific war," and the former United States consul at Singapore, Kenneth S. Patton, whom I found at the old headquarters, was advising all Americans to leave immediately.

Evacuation from the south Java coast was decided upon, and it was to be perilous, since Japanese planes already were turning their attention in that direction. Ahead of us, too, were 280 miles of riding in an ancient, protesting jalopy, with a reckless Javanese driver at the wheel.

Much could be written about that drive through pitch-black darkness, along roads devoid of direction

3 More Ships, 75 Men Feared Victims of Subs

Loss Would Make 41 Vessels Sunk in U. S.-Patrolled Waters

Loss of three more cargo ships, presumably by enemy action, was disclosed by the Navy Department last night.

They were:

Norwegian motor ship Leif, sunk off the Atlantic Coast with a possible loss of 15 lives.

American tanker Norvana, long overdue and "presumed lost."

Panamanian freighter Olympic, also overdue and presumed lost.

The Leif was controlled by the Norwegian Shipping and Trade Commission, and was under charter to the Bull Lines of New York, the Navy Department's brief announcement stated.

Loss of the Norvana, a 2677-ton freighter, and the Olympic, a 5335-ton tanker, was disclosed earlier in the evening.

Their crews, totaling 60 for both ships, were believed to have perished.

While no details of the sinkings were available, both vessels were believed to have been victims of enemy submarines.

The last known locations of the ships were not given, but if they were destroyed off the United

Colin Kelly, No. 1 hero of the United States Army Air Corps, who gave his life to destroy the Japanese battleship Haruna, off the Philippines. Corregidor, Bataan, March 6.—I flew with Kelly.

After moving from field to field, eluding Jap attacks, in the first two days of the war and even sleeping under the wing of our B-17 (flying fortress) one night, we proceeded to badly bombed Clark Field (north of Manila) on the morning of December 10 for a load of bombs and gasoline.

When we were about half finished (loading) an air raid warning sounded. I well recall, it was then 9:35 (a. m.).

I started all four motors at once—something highly unconventional—and we took off as soon as possible.

We had time to load only three bombs, but those were big babies.

We cleared the field safely, proceeded east of Lingayen Gulf and waited for other planes which were scheduled to join us.

Colin (Capt. Colin Kelly), who was deputy squadron leader, told me our mission was to get an aircraft carrier believed off north Luzon.

Other B-17's apparently received a different, last-minute order, so we started looking for the enemy alone, and flew as far as a small island

Fresh Soviet Armies Roll Back Germans

Reds Capture Town 12 Miles From Dniepropetrovsk

By the United Press

London, March 6.—Marshal Timoshenko's Red army of the Ukraine was reported unofficially tonight to have recaptured Novomoskovsk, Samara River village only 12 miles from Dniepropetrovsk on the big bend of the Dnieper.

Stockholm dispatches otherwise unconfirmed said the vanguard of the Soviet forces driving westward through the Ukraine had reached the area of Novomoskovsk, forcing the German garrison to retreat to the northwest.

The capture of Novomoskovsk, northeast of Dniepropetrovsk, would represent a gain of more than 50 miles for Timoshenko's men since the last official announcement that his offensive had reclaimed Lozovaya.

The night communique broadcast from Moscow said the Russians repulsed German counterattacks and continued to advance, occupying more localities in several sectors. It said Russian planes Thursday destroyed 79 enemy craft, attacked

U. S. Law Guards Half Holidays

Governmental bureaus wanting to wipe out Saturday afternoon holidays for the duration have found they are running head-on into the law, which requires compensatory time off for the half-day's work.

Congress must act to alter this situation, and it is probable that the President will ask for a uniform labor policy for all Federal workers.

Greatest Naval And Air Fights In History Are Developing

By the Associated Press

London (Saturday), March 7. Walter Farr, Daily Mail correspondent assigned to the United States Pacific Fleet, in a dispatch to his newspaper datelined "At Sea Friday," said "Great convoys of ships carrying American troops, pilots, planes, tanks and guns" are heading through the southwest Pacific.

This correspondent wrote that "naval and air battles without parallel in history are developing."

(The Paris radio said last night that a big air battle also was in progress over the Ladrones Islands.

(The Ladrones are directly north of the American Island of Guam, which the Japanese captured at the outbreak of the war.)

Preparing for Offensive

"These massive forces will not only help to defend Australia," Farr wrote. "They are taking with them large quantities of materials to be used to build the foundations for a great offensive against the Japanese. Every ship in every convoy is a load of concentrated hitting power.

"They are carrying hundreds of the finest pilots America can produce, powerful units trained in landing operations, hardy infantry from American plains.

"As the convoys move westward along the closely guarded lifeline to Australia, the Japanese are shooting out great tentacles of naval and air power five, six or seven thousand miles into the Pacific toward Australia and the United States.

"In some areas the tentacles consist of long-range submarines. In other areas, they are made up of aircraft carriers loaded with powerful bombing planes, in others, warships.

Battle of Pacific On

"Naval and air battles without parallel in history are developing. These battles are taking place at widely separated points over 70 million square miles of ocean.

Dutch Pilots Beat Gun, Bombed Jap Ships Before War

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

London, March 6.—Naval pilots of the Dutch East Indies air force, believing war with Japan inevitable, used to practice high-level precision bombing on Japanese fishing trawlers engaged in espionage activities around the Java Archipelago, long prior to the outbreak of the war in the Pacific, a Dutch naval air arm commander said here today.

"We used to know that these damned Japs were deliberately living in houses near our airdromes," he said, "and we knew they were doing it to spy on us, but we were too gentlemanly to do anything about it. We also knew that their fishing trawlers were very often taking soundings along our coast.

"But we knew very well what was going on and the Dutch air force unofficially used to do something about it. We are very proud of our efficiency at high-level bombing. We used to practice on towed targets and we used to practice on Jap trawlers. We started blowing the suspicious trawlers to bits as early as 1934. There was never any trace of them when we had finished with them and we never reported our work to our superiors."

Politics As Usual

A leading Democratic Senator—who did not wish to be quoted "yet"—last night was considering making a charge on the Senate floor that the conduct of New Deal politics as usual, as urged in effect Thursday night in a speech by Attorney General Biddle, was hampering the war effort.

Biddle, addressing a meeting of New Dealers at the Cosmos Club, urged his hearers to keep up the "political fight" for liberalism regardless of the war.

The success of the New Deal, Biddle said, was due to the fact that it "was not just a group of theorists or liberals, but because it is a political party tied up with the labor movement under an able political leader. A vigorous labor movement gave it strength."

"The mistake," he said, "is to consider civil liberties only from the standpoint of conserving them. We must consider them as one of the aggressive things which will help democracy win the war.

"Hold the political trench, because the opposition is going to fight whether you do or not."

The Senator said he might issue a statement today or might address the Senate Monday on the subject of the point of view expressed by the Attorney General. This view, he said, might be responsible for causing the war effort to bog down.

The group, meeting in celebration of the tenth anniversary of the inauguration of the New Deal, heard what Representative Eliot (Democrat), of Massachusetts, last night called "an intellectual discussion by New Deal sympathizers of problems in ariculture, labor, civil liberties and a number of other subjects as they apply to the war effort, and as they are affected by the war."

He said participants in the discussion sought to determine what proportion of New Deal ideals could be retained during the war and how New Deal measures could implement the war.

The meeting was sponsored by the New Republic, liberal magazine. Michael Straight, Washington correspondent for the New Republic, who was toastmaster, closed the meeting with a speech in which he said: "The New Deal is more dynamic than fascism and more revo-

Nehru Demands Freedom

British Warned That Revolt In India Is Real Menace

By the Associated Press

London, March 6.—A plea from Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, recognized leader of India's nationalists, for immediate formation of a provisional Indian government "responsible to the Indian people and not to the viceroy or the British government" was regarded tonight by government critics as an urgent, eleventh-hour warning to Britain to stop temporizing and grant India dominion status.

Nothing short of this political concession can stand a chance of winning the sympathies of India's 400 millions for the Allied war effort, these sources said, and no other bargain will be acceptable to national leaders. Failing this, they added, a decisive number of the native masses are bound to regard Axis-sponsored Subhas Chandra Bose, outlawed former mayor of Calcutta, as their deliverer.

The government's side was presented tonight by L. S. Amery, secretary for India and Burma, who declared Britain's colonial system has been based on "justice and fair play."

The little conservative, in one of the hottest spots in the cabinet, said:

"Nothing could be more inconsistent, that the people who a few years ago denounced the militarism of the government of India and the crushing burdens imposed on the

British Hurl Tanks and Planes Into Successful Counterattacks in Burma

Open Terrain Allows Use of Armored Units

By the United Press

London, March 6.—British forces hurled tanks and planes against the Japanese invaders of Burma today in fierce counterattacks near Pegu, inflicting heavy casualties and giving "a very good account of themselves," according to a Rangoon communique which reached London tonight.

The communique indicated that the counterattacks were launched during the third day of a battle which began when the Japanese drove a wedge across the Sittang River into open country along the road to Rangoon, 55 miles southwest of Pegu.

And the imperials appeared to be holding firm.

"The area around Pegu today was the scene of several fierce engagements, in which our tropos gave a very good account of themselves," the communique said. "Our attacks were carried out by our armored forces with infantry and artillery support and inflicted heavy casualties on the enemy.

"Our forces captured four anti-tank guns and other materiel. Over 60 of the enemy dead were counted on the battlefield. Our casualties were very small."

Tank Use Increased

Earlier Far Eastern advices had mentioned increased Allied use of planes and tanks in counterattacks west of the Sittang River where open country permitted the full employment of armored weapons for the first time in the Burma campaign.

The new communique added that the situation around Rangoon itself remained unchanged except for a light bombing of the airdrome north of the city, which caused neither damage nor casualties.

Rangoon's essential services "are functioning as usual," the communique said.

A British military source said the defenders might have brought tanks into play as early as two days ago, when the Japanese forced their first major crossing of the Sittang River. This advance moved the battle theater from the jungles and underbrush of Burma's southeastern shank to the flat and nearly treeless rice lands of the Sittang and Irrawaddy River valleys.

Here, in contrast to earlier phases of the Burma fighting where the imperials were hard-put to deploy mechanized units against Japanese infiltration, there was footing for tanks and armored cars and the British had apparently chosen the area to make a major stand.

Japs Find Scant Cover

A delayed dispatch from Mandalay said that the Allies attacked with tanks and planes yesterday and that R. A. F. pilots machine-gunned roads "swarming" with Japanese soldiers. The Japanese were reported finding scant cover for the first time whereas before they crossed the Sittang "only the dust from their feet" rising above narrow, jungle-shrouded roads had revealed their presence.

This dispatch said the "battle for Rangoon," 55 miles southwest of Pegu, apparently was well under way.

The Burma broadcast relayed from Chunking asked all officers who had been evacuated from the Rangoon district and were not otherwise assigned to report to Mandalay, indicating that city 350 miles up the Burma Road supply railway will become Allied Burma headquarters in the event Rangoon falls.

Australia Next for Japanese 'After Java,' Stirling Believes

By Rear Admiral Yates Stirling, jr.
U. S. N. Retired
United Press Naval Critic

For all practical purposes the Japanese already virtually have completed their conquest of Java, last island of the Netherlands East Indies in the hands of the United Nations.

It is possible that Dutch "islands of resistance," such as that created by Gen. MacArthur in the Philippines, may be maintained for an indefinite period, but they would not have much effect on the grand strategy of the great battle for control of the western Pacific Ocean.

My own opinion, based upon long experience as a naval commander in the Pacific, is that the Japanese will hurl great forces against Australia as soon as they have Java under control.

The Japanese timetable, I believe, calls for control of the western Pacific by June 1. That control, of course, cannot be effective until Australia is taken or at least neutralized as a potential American base from which our forces, cooperating with the Australians, could attempt a northward offensive.

Double Drive on India

It is always possible, of course, that the Japanese may choose to concentrate everything they have in a great offensive against India, timed to coincide with a German drive toward the Suez Canal, but I doubt that that will be the case.

The Japanese should have Java under control within a fortnight or less and that would give them more than two months for their assault upon Australia before June—the earliest month in which any German drive toward Suez, assuming one is planned, is likely to come.

It would seem a fair guess that the Japanese general staff, despite its considerable losses during the Malayan and N. E. I. campaigns, still believes that it has strength enough to undertake the conquest of Australia and is determined to remove that last threat to its control of the western Pacific as soon as possible.

Raids Part of Plan

Their continued raids of Darwin and other north Australian air and sea bases, I believe, are as much a part of a plan for an eventual invasion of the sub-continent as to cripple bases from which Allied reinforcements can be sent to Java. Their occupation of Timor, Amboina and other islands, and their persistent aerial attacks on Port Moresby, New Guinea, also point to an early effort to land troops in Australia.

Indeed, from a strategic viewpoint, the Japanese must render Australia impotent, and prevent it from becoming a great American base, if they are to win their war. So long as it remains hostile to them and the California-Australia supply line remains open, the whole Nipponese position is endangered.

Australian General Calls For Offensive

By the Associated Press

Melbourne, March 6.—Japan will attack Australia "in a matter of weeks, not months," Maj. Gen. Bennett declared today in calling for swift, positive action.

As if in reply, Prime Minister Curtin submitted a proclamation making all men up to 60 liable for military service.

Gen. Bennett, who commanded the Australians in Malaya and escaped, said he spoke "at the risk of being called a scare-monger," and that he was convinced the Japanese would employ the same tactics used in Malaya and Java.

"We must move swiftly," he said in an interview. "We must smash into this menace. I have no doubt whatever that we will be able to destroy any Japanese force that attempts to land here.

"It is positive action that will beat the Japanese. It is only by concentrating all our efforts on this positive action and by development of an offensive spirit that we can insure victory."

Sydney had an air-raid alarm this afternoon, based on a false report.

The air minister said Japanese planes had been reconnoitering in the New Guinea area for 24 hours.

The government announced that a senior cabinet member probably would be sent to Washington soon for conferences.

H. V. Evatt, attorney general and minister of external affairs, was mentioned in Canberra as the most likely selection.

The fact that the contemplated mission was disclosed just after announcement of an agreement between Australia and New Zealand on the conduct of the war was taken as an indication that this joint program required intimate discussion with the United States Government.

Allies in Java Are Prepared For Last Stand

that in eastern Java as well the enemy had been thrown back in some sectors. The first of these was apparently that reported by the Dutch above Bandoeng.)

The Dutch command, again refusing to submit to the looming catastrophe, thus quietly summed up the situation late in the day:

"The battle for Java continues to rage stubbornly.

Batavia Is Evacuated

"Several places, including Jogjakarta, had to be abandoned.

"In order to obtain greater freedom for the battle of western Java (by this was meant the central western section and not the already substantially abandoned extreme west), our troops have evacuated Batavia.

"As a result of the enemy's great superiority and mastery of the air, our troops are exposed continuously to such violent bombardment that they have been unable to rest for many days and are now gradually becoming overtired.

"This makes the situation serious, but not hopeless."

One of the most critical of all phases appeared to have been that official acknowledgment that the defenders were nearing the end of their physical power to endure.

Batavia fell as so many of the proudest possessions of the Dutch had fallen—a city holding only the ashes of all that had been of military value—and the Dutch wasted no tears upon its passing.

Permanent Raid Alert

Instead, they set out at once to defend the next metropolitan center imminently threatened—Bandoeng, lying 60 airline miles southeast of the abandoned old capital.

A state of permanent air raid alert was applied here in Bandoeng; full blackout restrictions went into effect. There were several air-raid alarms today but no bombs fell.

In all towns immediately threatened by the enemy, it was required that all liquor stocks be destroyed—this not as a prohibition upon the Dutch but to keep whisky out of the mouth of the invader.

The position at the Sourabaya naval base was not known in detail, but Dutch dispatches delayed four days in transit reported that as early as March 2 "certain destructions" were carried out there, the explosions shaking the entire city over a period of three hours.

In the face of expected assault and with cannonade plainly audible from the north, Bandoeng was believed self-sufficient in food and water and thus so much the better equipped for a stiff resistance.

Reinforcements Landed

The plateau upon which the city is situated is practically the only part of west Java not now invested by the invader.

There appeared no doubt that the invader had landed considerable reinforcements and his strength in ground forces alone was believed to be at least 100,000. Official circles did not give this figure but they said the Allied effectives were outnumbered probably 5 to 1. This, it was said, applies to tanks, artillery, mortars and other armament as well as to man power.

In the air the Japanese had a virtual monopoly, so much that they were able to all but paralyze Allied ground operations in the daylight hours.

The greater Java plain, which runs for 800 miles along the north coast and is about 35 miles deep, has now been almost entirely evacuated or overrun by the Japanese.

The last port which could handle reinforcements, Tjilatjap on the south coast, has been utterly destroyed by Japanese bombardment.

JAVA'S LAST STAND—With the plain of the north coast of Java overrun by Jap invaders, the Allied defenders of Java fell back to the plateau about Bandoeng for a last stand. They abandoned much of western Java and Batavia itself, the capital of all the Dutch East Indies. Invaders have drawn a rough arc of attack around Bandoeng. By capturing Jogjakarta in middle Java, the Japs have virtually cut the Dutch island in two. Bombers have destroyed Tjilatjap, last port which could handle reinforcements signs and with the driver, nicknamed George, continually getting himself lost.

We reached our destination just in time for me to throw my bags aboard a departing heavy bomber—I was to follow them later. The fliers there, American and British, were "rarin' to go," but had no fighter planes to "go" in. Bombers came and left continually while I waited. The order of the day was "get out while the getting's good."

Once, on Saturday afternoon, Japanese planes dropped their calling cards (bombs) in the center of that airport, where more American bombers were expected momentarily.

Late in the evening my chance for a get-away came, and after a conference with W. H. McDougall, another United Press correspondent, it was decided that I would take it and that he would stay behind. The next thing I remember was a scorching, red-sanded desert serving as a runway, and a pilot who had been on many bombing missions telling me that on one of his recent flights he had seen "uncountable Japanese transports stretching to the horizon." He said that "we emptied everything we had and headed back for the base."

In Australia I have found the most active recruiting in progress and war consciousness at a peak. Everyone knows that when the Japanese tide strikes Australia, it will be a job to stop it. This wilderness country's contribution to empire defense already has depleted its own defenses.

Airline Head Quits For Military Service

Kansas City, March 6 (AP).—Thomas Fortune Ryan III, resigned today from presidency of the mid Continent Airlines, Inc., in order to enter military service.

Ryan, who is 38, married and father of three children, did not indicate the nature of the service he would enter.

At a special meeting the board of directors elected J. W. Miller, vice president and general manager, president of the company and designated John S. Wynne, the company's general counsel, to be chairman of the board.

Home Freezing Of Food Predicted

Dr. C. H. Mahoney, head of the Pniversity of Maryland, yesterday predicted that the shortage of tin under the defense program would increase home freezing and dehydrating of foods.

The forecast was made at the conclusion of a two-day garden school held at the university as part of a State-wide program to increase home production of foods this year.

An increased number of Maryland housewives purchased quick-freezing units last year, Dr. Mahoney said, and cold storage lockers, available in a number of Maryland communities, will keep such food indefinitely.

The President's Day

By International News Service

ATMOSPHERE BRISK: The President was in a brisk, strictly businesslike mood yesterday with no time for comedy, handshaking or dawdling conversation. At full speed he covered the ground between breakfast, the morning staff jamboree, and his Friday morning conclave with the questioning correspondents, whom he gave neat but unsaudy answers, if any, to their varied questions.

MYSTERY: From time to time an unidentified person keeps cropping up on the White House appointment schedule, giving rise to plain and fancy rumors as to who and why he is. Commander Paul Foster, U. S. N., identified no more specifically than as a naval officer, has been coming around for chats with the President frequently of late. Yesterday he came in again, had a lengthy session in the executive inner sanctum. Best guessers betted that the commander is about to be sent on a special assignment—where remains a secret.

SQUEEZE: Alexander Wedell, Ambassador to Spain, got squeezed out of his 12:30 position as the President's schedule got hopelessly behind time. Mr. Wedell was asked to come back tomorrow.

NAZIS? NO: Lester A. Walton, United States Minister to Africa's Liberia, came in to report some things to the President, straightening him out on some misconceived stories going around that the Nazis are moving into Liberia. There were only 28 Germans in all of Liberia, Walton explained, and every one of them is trying to get out—quick. Twelve of the 28 made it by plane just the other day—Liberia is neutral today but tomorrow . . .? And in World War I Liberians fought on the side of the Allies. . . .

CHARITABLE LUNCH: Friend and Infantile Paralysis Foundation Director Basil O'Connor dropped in for lunch and a quick going over of the Foundation's business.

CABINET BILLS, ADDENDA: On the stroke of 2, the Cabinet filed quickly in for a two-hour conclave, filed out again, silently.

REUNION: Brightest spot in the long week came late in the afternoon when the President rushed over to the White House to see his son, Lieut. Franklin, jr., and daughter-in-law, Ethel du Pont Roosevelt. Minus his appendix, young Franklin has come home for a few days of convalescing before going to sea again. Dinner was gay, friendly and unbusinesslike, the President in good form, and the few close friends around the table in full wit.

No Imminent Plan To Seize Tires, Henderson Says

Aides of Leon Henderson, price administrator and civilian supply chief, said yesterday there was no "imminent" plan to confiscate tires from private car owners.

Henderson disclosed yesterday that the possibility of confiscating tires and devoting them to uses deemed essential had been discussed but no decision had been reached.

It was emphasized that Henderson was speaking of the indefinite future and that such a step would be taken only if it was considered absolutely necessary. Even then, it was said, it might apply only to spare tires, but no definite assurance was given on this score.

Japs, Fearing Uprising, Order Conquered Filipinos to Hand Over All Weapons

Subic Bay 'Jolt Hampers Foes' Offensive

By Marshall Andrews
Post Staff Writer

Japanese invaders of the Philippines, apparently with little faith in the worth of the "freedom" they have brought to the islands, have ordered all Filipinos within their lines to surrender weapons of every kind.

Probably in fear of an uprising, a War Department communique said yesterday, the Japanese have called upon the islanders to give up guns and blade weapons of all kinds, even ornamental knives and trophies. The order includes the Filipino bolos, well remembered by another generation of Americans, which to the Filipino are farm tools as well as weapons.

The communique revealed also that last Wednesday's surprise attack on Japanese shipping in Subic Bay by the few airplanes still with Gen. Douglas MacArthur on Bataan Peninsula apparently had paralyzed Japanese land operations for the time being. The American airplanes, all P-40 fighters, sank three large troopships, killed "thousands" of Japanese soldiers and damaged shore installations.

Since the attack, Gen. MacArthur reported, Japanese activities have been "negligible." This, he said, indicated that Japanese plans for an all-out offensive against his line across Bataan "were dislocated" by the air attack.

The Japanese order calling in all Filipino weapons would deprive many natives of their means of livelihood. The bolo, the War Department communique pointed out, "is universally used as an industrial and agricultural implement." The Filipino farmer uses it to build his house, fence his stock and harvest his crop.

It was felt here that the invader must have real cause to fear revolt among the natives to be impelled to order surrender of this tool. Evidence of dissatisfaction with Japanese rule has been accumulating.

This week, Sultan Sa Ramain, a member of the Commonwealth Senate, and other leaders on the island of Mindanao reported to MacArthur that 10,000 Mohammedan tribesmen had "sworn upon the Koran" to give their lives if necessary to drive the Japanese from their homeland.

Some time ago, MacArthur was notified by Capt. Datu Gumbay Piang, who said he commanded "20,000 Moros enlisted as bolomen of the United States Army," that he and his men were ready to die for America and their own country.

Army Communique No. 137

Text of the War Department communique issued yesterday as of 9:30 a. m. follows:

"Philippine Theater: Enemy activities during the past 24 hours were negligible.' It is believed that Japanese plans for an immediate renewal of the offensive were dislocated by our successes in the Subic Bay air attack.

"A copy of an order issued by the Japanese Army in the Philippines which has reached Gen. MacArthur's headquarters directs the Filipinos in occupied areas to surrender guns and blade weapons of every description, including ornamental and utilitarian knives and trophies.

"This order would operate to deprive the Filipino of his bolo, which while sometimes used as a weapon, customarily serves as a tool. It is universally used as an industrial and agricultural implement. With his bolo the Filipino farmer builds his house, fences his stock and harvests his crops. Hence, if he surrenders his bolo he will find it difficult to earn a livelihood.

"This order is interpreted by Gen. MacArthur as indicating that the invaders fear that the increasing resentment of the natives may develop into a popular uprising against the Japanese.

"There is nothing to report from other areas."

CHINA'S POTENTIAL FIGHTER PILOTS ARE TRAINED IN U. S.—Under the expert tutelage of American air instructors, Chinese cadets are receiving advanced flying instructions today at a training center in Phoenix, Ariz. Special Chinese officers have been assigned to train them in drill peculiar to the army of Chiang Kai-shek. The fliers, who will be commissioned as lieutenants in the Chinese Air Force and assigned to service in the Far East immediately upon completion of their instruction, are shown at right in a classroom examining a bomb upon which they have inscribed: "So Solly, Hirohito Special." Revolt Menace In India Is Real poor country by the scale of her preparations, should now suggest that millions of armed and trained warriors could be stamped out of the ground by some political declaration."

In an interview at Allahabad, Nehru yesterday declared the Indian problem "can only be approached on a basis of Indian freedom." On the same day announcement of a plan to grant India more independence, including curtailment of the powers of the viceroy, was postponed here because of conservative objections that it was too advanced.

Britons well informed on the Indian problem said today that Nehru's remarks reflect his own and Mohandas K. Gandhi's views that the persuasion of Bose is so great that only swift execution of British freedom promises will counter it.

Nehru himself said: "Nothing else will make a vital difference or move our millions to effective action."

The London sources said there was real danger of a Bose-inspired revolt flaring behind the backs of the British now fighting in Burma.

Bose's supporters were said to have a majority where India's most martial peoples are concentrated. These are on the northwest frontier, in the Punjab and Maharatta. Moreover, he is said to still control Bengal—next door to Burma—as tightly as Tammany ever bossed New York.

Daily recordings of Bose's voice, expounding the theory of revolution, are flooding India from the Bangkok radio.

1. When the Gandhi forces in 1939 had the All-India Congress Committee deprive Bose of the presidency, 37 per cent of the committee remained true to the extremist.

2. In time of crisis this percentage is bound to increase if Nehru is unable to show results and Gandhi remains in nonviolent seclusion.

3. Bose adherents form the most active body of Indian political opinion.

(Subhas Chandra Bose should not be confused with Rash Behari Bose, the Indian traitor who has enjoyed asylum in Japan for 27 years and who the Japanese now have pushed forward as a "champion of Indian liberty" who would bring India into Japan's "co-prosperity sphere.")

When Are P-40s Coming, Query In Philippines

With Gen. MacArthur's Forces on Bataan Peninsula, March 5.—(Delayed)—When are those P-40's going to arrive to "raise hell on the other side of the line?"

That was the question, without exception, put to me by the wounded in an outdoor base hospital that I visited today. I was unable to answer that one, but I heartily agreed with the idea.

Col. J. W. Duckworth, of the Medical Corps, talked over some of the cases in the hospital and remarked strongly that he was convinced the morale of the wounded was very good, and that although the hospitals were outdoors the fresh air was good for the patients so long as there were no rains.

Col. Duckworth, from San Francisco, told of an incident where he took a piece of a Japanese shell fragment from a soldier's wound and discovered it was a small United States sewing machine screw driver. It evidently had been mixed up with some old scrap iron Japan purchased in the United States before the war.

Busy Day and Night

While the roar of dive-bombers and pounding of artillery is quiet momentarily, Gen. Douglas MacArthur's Philippine and American troops are kept busy day and night with various activities on the peninsula and on the fortified islands in Manila Bay.

Under the glare of a tropical sun I took an all-day trip to various organizations on Bataan, making short "thumb" rides over the dust-covered roads. Leaving the road and going down pathways, I cut through the thick forest and came out at one of many motor pools. Buried deep in the vines and foliage stood huge American-made trucks and cars undergoing checkups and repairs ranging from a little air for the tires to complete motor overhauls.

"As soon as this war is over and I get back to Arkansas I'm going to get me a horse," said a mechanic as he grinned through his grease stains and pointed out a six-wheeler with its insides out. "I've got enough grease in my hair to take two years to get out."

Cold Beer a Fine Idea

Out on the road again I got a ride for a few kilometers in a station wagon driven by Capt. F. H. Stonecifer, of San Francisco. We talked about the war—and agreed we both were much in need of a cold beer to wash the dust down our throats. We said farewell at a roadside signpost reading: "Tokyo—3000 miles."

I walked into a well-secluded camp to be greeted by Capt. Lee Stevens, of Manila, an electric traffic manager. He showed me through his "CP" (post of command) which was one of his own buses parked under a big tree. The seats had been taken out and the interior equipped with field desks, telephones and camp cots. All were portable in order to make way for the chow table.

We talked of former days in Manila and plans for a celebration when the move back is made.

"In a couple of weeks I'm going to drive this rolling office toward Manila," he said.

How About the P-40's?

Then I hopped an outbound truck and bounced along to the base hospital where everybody asked me about those P-40 pursuit planes. I chatted with the Filipinos and found a sincere faith and trust in MacArthur and his staff. They were all anxious to return to the front to avenge the enemy's attack on their homeland and families. Weeks of war have made those people determined to fight to the bitter end and drive out the Japanese.

Leaving the hospital in search of a place to sleep, I was convinced that Japanese efforts to sell the Filipinos the idea of brotherly love certainly was failing to complete failure, as evidenced by the good morale among the Filipino soldiers.

Far-Flung Naval Activity Indicated

By the United Press

Honolulu, March 6.—The United States Navy is carrying out far-flung operations in the Pacific and striking unexpected blows at Japanese possessions, it was indicated today from recent Tokyo broadcasts and a Washington announcement that U. S. carrier-based fighters had shot down 16 of 18 Japanese bombers "west of the Gilbert Islands."

The latest indication of these operations is a Tokyo broadcast reporting that 30 enemy planes raided the Japanese Minami Tori Island, in the Marianas group, Wednesday.

Saturday Tokyo reported that enemy forces including a carrier, two cruisers and six detsroyers on February 24 attacked Wake Island, scene of a heroic stand by U. S. Marines in the early days of the war.

Naval officials here decline to comment on these reports but on Monday the Navy announced in Washington that fighters from a carrier and antiaircraft fire downed 16 of 18 bombers attacking a U. S. naval force west of the Gilberts.

There have been no further reports of this U. S. naval force but the vague location of its encounter with the Japanese bombers indicated that this force might have attacked or be preparing to attack any one of many Japanese points—from strategically important Truk and Ponope islands, in the Caroline group, to more recently acquired Japanese holdings in the Solomon and Bismarck archipelagos. Japan has long been reported developing Truk and Ponope as military bases.

Observers here believe that the island of Minami Tori, which the Japanese said was raided by enemy planes is former Marcus Island, northwest of Wake, which Japan has claimed and which lies only 1200 miles southeast of Japan itself.

Colin Kelly Fought to End, Copilot Says

north of Luzon, where we observed two small Jap transports.

But we were after bigger game, so we changed our course and traveled south, hitting Luzon at Aparri (at the north tip of Luzon). There we saw seven ships—three transports, three destroyers and one big fat son-of-a-gun.

Three pursuits took after us, so we climbed up to 20,000 feet and the pursuits left us, leaving the field open on a perfect bombing day, at a choice altitude.

Kelly, myself and the navigator took turns looking through the glasses and concurred that the fat boy couldn't be anything but a battleship, so we decided to let go.

Over the battleship we started again, and dropped our three bombs in the trail. It was perfect—one hit very near the starboard side, so close it was almost a miss; the second hit amidships near the funnel, and the other explosion occurred near the port side.

It was a bombardier's dream. The gods of luck were with us and when we left, the battleship was already burning fiercely. The bombardier, Corpl. M. Levin, deserves special credit since he was using an untried bombsight of a type slightly different than he usually operated.

Highly satisfied with the accomplishment, we started back to Clark Field and let down to 10,000 feet. Kelly instructed the radio operator to call the field for instructions and while the operator was doing so, two or three pursuits came out of a low bank of clouds immediately below Clark Field and attacked us.

Their machine gun and cannon set our ship afire. Evidently they came up underneath, and if the radio operator had been at his usual battle position he would likely have seen them in time.

The Japs hit our radio compartment and also our oxygen supply was blown up and our left wing set afire.

When we were hit we dove for a scud of clouds and got below it. The ship was burning like a holocaust. Kelly ordered the men to bail out and the rear crew jumped first, with the bombardier and radio operator leaving next from the frontal escape.

A minute later the plane went completely out of control and threw us—Kelly and me—against the cabin. I thought, "Well, this is it."

All the time Kelly had been hollering to the machine gunners to do their stuff and beat 'em off. Kelly, a fighter to the last, as usual didn't swear, even though he knew we were in a plenty tough spot.

The rest of the story is vague. I tried to make my way to a nearby overhead escape but couldn't seem to move. I believe I was thrown out of the plane by an explosion and through no volition of my own.

Six of the eight members of the crew landed safely. Kelly's body was found near the plane, while the engineer manning one of the side guns was killed instantly by one of the first bursts from the Jap pursuits.

I flew with Kelly from Hawaii, and even with only one day's notice concerning his unexpected transfer to the Philippines, he didn't seem to mind. He was a real man, he acted calmly and deliberately and I am confident he died with a smile of satisfaction on his lips because he knew the Haruna never survived those three wounds.

The following footnote to Robins' dispatch was written by United Press Correspondent Frank Hewlett, who is with Gen. MacArthur's Army in the Philippines:

Robins, like many other planeless pilots, is doing his best to make himself useful on Bataan. He is presently with an air-warning detachment located high in the mountains. I missed him my first trip there because he was heading a party searching for a Jap plane which had crashed in the jungles nearby.

The original announcement of the sinking of the Jap battleship merely said it was a vessel of the Haruna class. The Tokyo radio once confirmed that the Haruna was lost, but later contradicted itself and said the Haruna was only slightly damaged.

States Coast, their loss, with that of the Leif, would bring to 41 the number of United Nations or neutral vessels sunk in U. S. patrol-zone waters.

Norvana's Lifeboat Found

The freighter Norvana, formerly the York, operated out of Baltimore. Owned by the Merchant and Miners Transportation Co. of Maryland, the vessel had a normal crew of 29 men.

The owners said the only trace of the Norvana was a battered lifeboat and it assumed all hands were lost.

The Olympic carried a normal crew of 31. Owned by the Company Internacional De Vapores, Ltd., the tanker listed her home port as Los Angeles.

While the Norvana and Olympic were listed on the "missing" list, there remained the possibility that the crews or some of their members might turn up at distant ports.

The announcements of attacks and sinkings do not cover incidents in the Caribbean, where Axis submarines have made recent forays.

During the day, a ship operating company in Philadelphia notified families of the deaths of 18 seamen in one attack off Aruba, Dutch Island off the northern coast of South America. The name of the ship was not made public.

Two Ships Hit, Make Port

An East Coast Canadian Port, March 6 (AP).—Two tankers of the Allied merchant fleets have made their way into this port under their own power after separate torpedo attacks in which gaping holes were torn in their hulls.

Neither ship lost a man although the torpedo explosions ripped a hole in the side of one large enough for a submarine to sail on into her hull.

One of the ships, laden with gasoline at the time of the attack, had three-quarters of her cargo still aboard when she reached port.

The attacks occurred in widely separated parts of the western Atlantic.

The deck gun crew of one of the tankers held off a submarine with gunfire for an hour, driving it beneath the surface.

"We lost track of it," the captain said. "When it did get us with a torpedo, only God knows why the gas we were carrying didn't ignite."

Tokyo Claims 2d Pearl Harbor Attack, 13 Hours After First

By the Associated Press

Tokyo (from Japanese broadcast), March 6.—Japanese imperial headquarters claimed today a special flotilla of naval craft, none of which survived, made a night assault upon Pearl Harbor and sank a battleship of the Arizona class 13 hours after the original air attack on December 7.

This purported sea-borne attack, involving ships of unstated size and number, was reported in a special announcement of posthumous citation and promotion for nine officers of the so-called suicide flotilla.

It acknowledged that all of the attacking craft were "regarded as having either blown themselves up or having been sunk by the enemy."

(There was no comment yesterday in Washington.

(Official United States accounts of the Pearl Harbor assault have indicated that all damage to ships and shore installations was the work of one coordinated attack by planes and submarines which started in early morning.

(The Roberts commission found that the attack was carried out by planes from three or four carriers, supported by surface craft; and by "a few small submarines."

(Furthermore, the commission reported there was no evidence of any damage done by torpedoes fired by the submarines. One of these submarines was destroyed off Pearl Harbor, another inside the harbor, and a third—a two-man, short-range craft—was grounded in Kaneohe Bay and captured.

(In reporting a night naval attack, the Japanese appeared to be putting out propaganda intended to cause confusion and create doubt as to official United States accounts. The Tokyo propagandist could very well have been endeavoring also to cover up sizable losses among sea forces in other theaters.)

The report on the imperial headquarters announcement, as broadcast by Domei, Japanese News Agency, said:

"Imperial headquarters in a special announcement for the first time detailed an account of the heroic role of self-sacrifice displayed by members of the Japanese navy's 'special attack flotilla' who took part in the sensational air and naval assault on Pearl Harbor December 7.

"The announcement strongly lauded the supreme sacrifice offered by these men of the Japanese navy who made the 'suicide attack.' . . .

"Simultaneously, the navy ministry announced the death of nine officers of the special attack flotilla and their post-humous elevation to two ranks higher than the position they held prior to their death.

"A special citation was granted the special attack flotilla by Admiral Isoroku Yamamoto, commander in chief of the combined fleet, for 'having enhanced as it did, both at home and abroad, the reputation of loyalty of members of the imperial navy as well as the morale of the entire service.'

"The imperial headquarters announcement describing the action taken by the special attack flotilla in the Pearl Harbor debacle declared the flotilla, after secretly leaving a Japanese base, slipped into Pearl Harbor after passing through the enemy's guard lines and complicated channels, and took up a preassigned position whereafter the vessels attacked with destructive effect."

Lyttelton Sees Lessened Nazi Peril to Egypt

By the Associated Press

London, March 6.—The German threat to Egypt has been lessened by the British campaign in Cirenaica, Oliver Lyttleton declared today on his return from his post as minister of state in eastern Mediterranean area.

He said 50,000 to 100,000 tons of German ammunition had been captured, and added that this, plus the desert barrier over which the Axis forces would have to attack, put the British in "far better position for the defense of Egypt than before."

Returning to become minister of production, Lyttleton declined to discuss the possibility of another British offensive in North Africa.

He gave the impression, however, that it would be almost impossible for the Germans to develop another real drive toward Egypt in the near future.

The German air force sent a whole air fleet to support Gen. Erwin Rommel's planned offensive, he said.

"The British attacked first and pushed him to Ain el Gazala, where he lost another battle," Lyttelton said.

"We pressed after him with light forces, but he was able to collect a small striking force for a counter-attack. We suffered a tactical defeat which was not of great importance, and temporarily lost territory.

"The threat to Egypt has decreased as a result of this campaign."

He said supply difficulties had hampered both armies and recalled the comment of a captured German general that "dessert war is a tacticians paradise and an administrative staff officer's hell."

Rommel Is Reported Conferring With Hitler

Cairo, March 6 (AP).—Field Marshal Erwin Rommel, commander of the Axis African army which has been stalemated for several weeks in the Libyan desert by the combination of British forces and bad weather, has left North Africa to confer with Adolf Hitler, it was reported today.

Meanwhile British headquarters reported a continued lull in actual operations.

New Lifeline To Chungking Now Is in Use

By T. F. Reynolds

Copyright by Chicago Sun

Official announcement of Anglo-American plans to make India an industrial reservoir for United Nations war materials coincided last night with the disclosure in Chungking that China's new lifeline from India already is in operation.

As the Japanese war machine plowed steadily deeper into Java, it was becoming increasingly obvious that the United States and Great Britain were exerting desperate efforts to strengthen the defenses of India and consolidate the supply line to India which is to replace the now-closed Burma Road.

A simultaneous announcement by the State Department and the Indian government at New Delhi announced that the first step toward development of war industries in India would be immediate dispatch of an American technical mission to do the preliminary ground work.

Although the announcement withheld disclosure of personnel, it was disclosed this week by the Chicago Sun that the mission would be headed by Henry F. Grady, commercial and economic expert who formerly served as Assistant Secretary of State.

The announcement emphasized not only the urgent need for speed in development of industrial resources for war, but also oriented the development against the background of the whole East Asian war picture—thus indicating that the United Nations strategists hope that war industries of India may henceforth provide the machines and materiel for the Chinese of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek.

"The military situation in southeastern Asia emphasizes the need to develop fully, and as rapidly as feasible, the industrial resources of India as a supply base for the armed forces of the United Nations in the Near East and the Far East," the announcement said.

It said further that "the Government of the United States and the government of India earnestly hope that this step in American-Indian collaboration may serve to make an effective contribution to the success of the United Nations in the war against aggression."

Contrary to general assumptions, India already possesses extensive heavy industries, including the greatest steel-producing units in the British Empire. Unfortunately from a strategic view, however, much of the Indian industry useful for the war effort is located on India's east coast, in the area most vulnerable to the increasing menace of Japanese assault.

But so long as the British imperials and United Nations forces can hold the Japanese line on Burma or short of India proper, future Indian production can be invaluable both to allied armies on the Indian Ocean coast and the millions of Chinese fighters in the interior of China.

Well-informed officials here, on reading dispatches from Chungking that the new Chinese lifeline from India already is operating, were inclined to discount for the moment the significance of the new route. The Chinese disclosure admitted that part of the new route traverses jungles through which elephants are the only means of transportation.

But the officials handling plans for the new route predict that by the end of March, a highly feasible route will be ready, to link India and Chiang Kai-shek's forces. This route, they said, extends from an Indian railhead high in the mountains to the Yangtze River, down which vital supplies can move.

While thousands of workers drive roadways over mountain peaks and through impenetrable jungles, these officials said, the roadless gap between the railhead and the Yangtze is being bridged temporarily by freight-carrying airplanes, shuttling constantly between the railroad and the river route.

Other routes already are being developed to counter the chance that further Japanese drives might smash into eastern India and snip off the most direct approach.

Agencies May Have to Keep Present Cars

The House Appropriations Committee yesterday recommended freezing the present stock of passenger autos used by Federal agencies, aside from the War and Navy Departments and the White House, as it reported a War Department civil functions appropriation bill totaling $350,650,826.

Representing an increase of $87,329,998 over similar appropriations last year, the bill contains provisions for rivers and harbors and flood-control work considered necessary to national defense. It also contains $107,500,000 for "protection devices" and improvements on the new series of locks in the Panama Canal.

Warning in its report that "demands for passenger-carrying vehicles by military and naval forces, particularly the former, will severely tax the supply," it added:

"Such (autos) as may be available should be reserved for defense uses and all Federal agencies should be required to get along with the equipment presently in use."

Funds For Soldiers' Home

Into the measure was inserted a provision prohibiting the purchase or exchange of any "motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles" by agencies other than the military and naval establishments and the White House without the specific approval of the Secretaries of War and Navy.

Of the total amount of the bill, $967,531 is marked for the maintenance of Soldiers' Home during this year and the 1943 fiscal year.

An increase of $33,036 in the 1943 budget for the home is "virtually mandatory," the committee said in its report, because of increased living costs and the opportunities of the home's employes to receive more lucrative employment elsewhere. Raises for employes will total $72,717.

In praise of the home's administration the report said: "This establishment is being conducted in a most praiseworthy manner, and officials of the home and its most able superintendent, Maj. Gen. Frederick W. Coleman, U. S. A. (retired), are deserving of the highest commendation."

1282 Veterans at Home

The home, which can accommodate a total of 1474 domiciliary and hospital members, had an average of 1282 former soldiers residing there during the 1941 fiscal year. Maintained for former soldiers of the Regular Army, it is supported out of its own funds, made up and kept up for the most part by future potential beneficiaries.

Also included in the civil functions bill is an item of $19,100 for construction and improvement of roads in Arlington Cemetery.

The Appropriations Committee simultaneously made public a transcript of testimony by Brig. Gen. Glen E. Edgerton, Governor of the Panama Canal, and other officials charged with expenditure of the funds for that area. Edgerton asked $47,034,637 for maintenance and operation of the canal, $56,826,800 for a third set of locks now in the process of construction, and $2,137,000 for sanitation.

Facilities Are Overtaxed

"As a result of increased demands," he said, "practically all canal facilities are taxed beyond their safe and economical capacity and are subjected to critical and dangerous overloading at the very time that complete assurance of their dependable operation assumes the highest importance."

He reported there had been "an extraordinary and continuing increase" in the number of vessels based in the Canal Zone "since the present emergency began," and declared that the number of naval vessels based there had increased from 24 to 51 during the past year, while the number of Army vessel jumped from 8 to 44. In addition to the Panama Canal allotments, the measure carried $151,473,700 for general flood control projects, $29,954,000 for projects on the Mississippi and its tributaries and $3,210,000 for those on the Sacramento, as well as $2,300,000 for hydroelectric power at the Fort Peck Dam and $4,166,000 at the Bonneville Dam.

District Project Funds Set

Funds for maintenance of existing projects in the District area as follows:

Potomac River at Alexandria, $5000; Potomac River below Washington, $10,000; Potomac at Mount Vernon, $4000; Occoquan Creek, $3000; Rappahannock River, $27,000.

Hearings on the measure disclosed a voiced opinion by Representative Snyder (Democrat), of Pennsylvania, that "sooner or later" Fort Myer would be moved to make more room for Arlington Cemetery.

Sidelights on the War

R.A.F. 'Coming Again,' British Radio Tells French Workers

London, March 6 (INS).—French war workers were warned tonight, in a broadcast to Europe by "Col. Britton," head of Britain's "V" army, to avoid labor which aids Germany because "the R. A. F. is coming again, more and more often."

(Earlier this week, British bombers raided the big Renault works near Paris, where several hundred casualties were reported.)

"We warned the workers we'd come," he said. "We don't want to kill our friends, but we warn you again to keep away from these factories, away from any work which is helping Germany.

"Don't forget the British pilot is your friend—but keep out of his way."

Britons Reported Taken

London, March 6 (AP).—The Berlin correspondent of the Stockholm newspaper Dagens Nyheter reports that Germans have told of capturing an occasional British parachutist attempting to join the Yugoslav guerilla army of Gen. Draja Mihailovic.

Authoritative sources refrained from comment on this dispatch, but the fact that British agents are working with the Mihailovic forces has long since been known.

To Head for Home

London, March 6 (AP).—The 140 American diplomats and journalists assembled at Bad Neuheim, Germany, are expected to leave for Lisbon on the way home at the end of March, a Berlin report said today.

About 16,000 United States citizens are in Germany. Some are interned, but most are merely under police supervision.

'Hitler Murdered My Son'

Buenos Aires, March 6 (AP).—The grief-stricken father of a German soldier killed on the Russian front purchased space in a Buenos Aires newspaper to proclaim that Adolf Hitler "murdered my son."

Despite Argentina's state of siege regulations designed "to prevent anyone from speaking ill of anybody," the German-language daily Argentinische Tageblatt carried the mourning-border paid death notice.

MacArthur Touted Anew

Melbourne, March 6 (AP).—The Melbourne Sun repeated its proposal that Gen. Douglas MacArthur be appointed Allied commander in chief in the southwest Pacific and declared today that his gallant stand in the Philippines had made him the most popular figure of the Pacific war.

The newspaper said such an appointment would be welcomed widely by Australians.

Europe Wheat Crop Off

Bern, March 6 (AP).—Il Osservatore Romano said today that unfavorable weather and lack of workers and draft animals had cut Europe's 1941 wheat harvest, exclusive of Russia, to less than 1,464,000,000 bushels, according to the latest estimates of the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome.

The harvest had been estimated last July at 1,573,800,000 bushels and at that time the outlook had been described as satisfactory and the crop described as about normal.

Transport Plane Explodes; 7 Lost

Stuart, Fla., March 6 (U.P.).—Seven men still were missing tonight, 24 hours after a twin-engined Army transport exploded in the air, lost a wing and plummeted in flames into the St. Lucie River 3 miles east of here.

Army Air Corps officials at Morrison Field, West Palm Beach, said a thorough search at the mouth of the St. Lucie, where it joins the Indian River, had failed to disclose any evidence regarding the fate of the seven aboard the big C-39 Douglas transport.

Bolles Urges Full Blackout Preparations

In view of the possibility that blackouts in the Washington area "might be called for days, even weeks," Col. Lemuel Bolles, director of District defense, yesterday pointed to the desirability of effective blackout equipment for all residences and stores.

Just by turning out lights or using makeshift equipment, he said, the citizens may be preparing themselves for discomforts later on. He also pointed out that "sitting in the dark" would not be comfortable or feasible in the event of accidents or sickness in the home.

"A blackout doesn't really hide a large city from an experienced flier," Col. Bolles said. "The English don't try to conceal the location of a city. They try to confuse the enemy so that he will not be able to pick out special targets. Just a few lights could be an excellent guide."

Regional Blackouts Due This Spring

Regional blackouts covering wide areas can be expected this spring, Dean James M. Landis, director of the Office of Civilian Defense, declared yesterday.

He said such a blackout for the New England States will be called some time this month.

Volunteers Assigned To Special Duties

Approximately 1000 civilian defense volunteers have been assigned to duty in voluntary participation activities, where they give their time to work not connected with the protective services.

Typical of the work done by these volunteers, according to files at the Civilian Defense Volunteer Office, are the following three "cases":

Mrs. John G. Henderson, 3149 Dumbarton Street Northwest, volunteered for training as a nurse's aide and is now working at Georgetown Hospital on a schedule which demands 150 volunteer hours a year. Mrs. V. R. Jones, 1811 Wyoming Avenue, works in an office during the day, but is glad to give one evening a week to typing and filing for Temple Center. Mrs. Ruth Segaloff, 3221 Connecticut Avenue Northwest, helps three mornings a week in a play school run for Hampshire House, often calling for the children and taking them home.

Women's Defense Class Graduates Today

Graduation exercises for the present class of the Women's Defense Training School will be held today at 8 p. m. at Collingwood Inn, in Virginia.

Registrations for the next class in motor transport will be accepted next week at the school's headquarters, 1229 Connecticut Avenue, work to begin March 16.

D. C. Fireman Completes Defense Course

Percy A. Davis, member of the Washington Fire Department, who lives at 2917 Akron Place Southeast, yesterday completed a course of instruction at the War Department Civilian Defense School at Edgewood Arsenal, Md. Instructions covered blackout control, organizing civilian defense units, preserving order in emergencies and defense against incendiaries and gases.

Charles C. Smith Funeral Service Set for Today

Funeral services will be held today at 3:30 p. m. at East Washington Heights Baptist Church for Charles Clifford Smith, who died yesterday at the Emergency Hospital. The Rev. Glenn B. Fausett will officiate and burial will be in the Washington National Cemetery.

Mr. Smith, an employe of the Smoot Sand & Gravel Co., lived at 4614 Stanley Avenue, Bradbury Heights, Md. He had been a resident in the District area for more than 20 years. Mr. Smith was an active member of the East Washington Heights Baptist Church and the Benning Council, No. 21, of the Junior O. U. A. M.

He is survived by his wife, Elizabeth Smith and a son, William Charles Smith.

Barbarous Thing

Father Sent To Jail for Burning Son

ANTHONY POWERS

By the Associated Press

Portland, Me., March 6.—A 90-day jail sentence was imposed today on William J. Powers, 30, after he admitted in municipal court that he had placed his 6-year-old son Anthony's hands on a hot stove because the child took some sugar from the pantry shelf.

"I never heard of such a barbarous thing," commented Judge Robert W. De Wolfe.

Powers, a welder, told the court: "I lost my head. I took care of him after it happened. I was afraid he would get sugar diabetes. He had eaten 10 pounds of sugar within three weeks. I did place his hands on the stove, but I didn't hold them there."

At a hospital, the boy's condition was described as good.

Plan Proposed To Recapture Excess Profits

By the Associated Press

Congressional action to recapture any excessive profits made by companies sharing in the 56-billion-dollar war production program was advocated yesterday by Chairman Byrd (Democrat), of Virginia, of the joint Committee on Nonessential Expenditures.

Byrd told reporters preliminary information led him to believe that the potential profits in the current program were so high that the Government ought to be able to recover up to three billion dollars and still leave participating firms with a fair return.

He said he would ask the committee to consider, probably after hearings next week, a proposal to impose recapture provisions on the earnings of these companies. This should be calculated, he said, to permit the corporations to retain as profits only a reasonable percentage on their invested capital as interpreted by the Treasury for tax purposes.

Arguing that legislation of this nature would be much more equitable than placing profit limitations in each individual contract, Byrd said he was impressed by the necessity of enacting safeguards beyond those provided in proposed increases in the excess profit rates in the new revenue program.

"With all of these contracts being negotiated now, instead of being let on competitive bids," he said, "it has become doubly important to see that no unconscionable profits are made by the companies manufacturing war goods."

Byrd said he felt the time had come for the committee to devote the major share of its efforts toward plugging expenditure leaks in the defense program. Previously it has concerned itself largely with attempts to trim nondefense expenditures.

Blackout Cost Put at Million

doubt about it, Federal buildings in Washington will cooperate 100 per cent in the next blackout test.

But whether the taxpayer wants a million dollars spent for blackout curtains is another matter.

The National Capital Parks, which is responsible for 7000 acres of District land and some of the city's most vital arterial roads—including Mount Vernon Memorial Highway and Constitution Avenue—has carried out its blackout preparations without fanfare, it developed yesterday.

Frank T. Gartside, assistant superintendent, said 16 switches have been installed and that park and road lights could be thrown off immediately.

Tools and equipment have been decentralized, first-aid courses given, and instruction furnished in various air-raid precautions. Park police on duty 24 hours daily are to handle the first warning signals, he said, and special telephone lines hook the parks to air-raid headquarters. Three of the key stations with maintenance equipment have men on duty all night always.

An additional $38,000 is requested from the District Commissioners to make the raid precautions complete, he said, and for needed additional protective equipment.

Treasury recommendations were largely confined.

Morgenthau, who spoke out on Tuesday against the outstanding of these proposals, the sales tax, yesterday opposed another, compulsory purchase of defense bonds.

"At this time I hope the committee will not force on me forced savings," he testified. "We are just getting under way with a voluntary purchase plan. All indications are that the people are going to respond in a big way and you can't have a forced basis and a voluntary basis. They don't go hand in hand."

Morgenthau said that if the time ever comes when he can't sell enough bonds by the voluntary system he would like to come before the committee and report. Asked how soon he would know, he said about July 1.

The Treasury is equally opposed to lowering individual income tax levels below present exemptions, but a strong bloc of Ways and Means Committee Democrats is insisting that taxes be spread and excess purchasing power curbed by one of the three methods, a sales tax, enforced savings or cuts in exemptions.

Separate Measures Urged

Chairman Doughton of the Ways and Means Committee and Chairman George of the Senate Finance Committee meanwhile conferred last night on an independent proposal to separate the Treasury's $1,340,000,000 in excise taxes from the rest of the tax bill and pass them first.

Advocated by Senator Brown (Democrat), of Michigan, the plan would enable the Treasury to start collections at an early date on the new list of excises. Doughton said he was not inclined to favor the plan, as "it would take just about as long to pass as the regular tax bill." Also opposing the split were House advocates of a general sales tax, who feared separate handling of selected excises would impair chances of a more general levy.

Gives Debt Forecasts

Testifying for the increase in the debt limit, Morgenthau said the Treasury will reach the end of its borrowing power before April 1 unless Congress raises the statutory limit. Reminding Congress that the war program now exceeds 140 billion dollars, he estimated that the public debt will go to $70,600,000,000 by June 30. A year from then, he said, the debt should reach $110,400,000,000, even with the seven billion dollars in new taxes.

"Our production of overwhelming quantities of war materials, an effort that makes this debt necessary, should frighten no one but our enemies," he remarked.

Morgenthau reported that the campaign to obtain funds from current income of the people by voluntary payroll deductions and other sales of defense bonds has yielded $4,300,000,000 in cash since May 1. Sales averaged 300 million dollars a month up to American entry in the war, 500 million dollars in December, over a billion in January, and 700 million dollars in February.

Other Treasury Powers

Besides lifting the debt limit, the bill gives the Treasury:

Flexible powers to issue many types of securities, on an interest-bearing basis, a discount basis, or a combined interest-bearing or discount basis.

Authority to accept Government securities in direct payment of income and other taxes, without previous conversion into cash.

Permission for the Treasury instead of the Postoffice Department to issue the savings stamps purchased by the public toward payment for bonds.

Authority to exchange its own securities for obligations of Government corporations, which the Treasury is refunding. Tax exemption removed from shares of stock issued by these other Federal agencies.

Power to purchase its own securities in the market at or before maturity. This would enable the Treasury to buy in before maturity old tax-free Treasury bonds issued before Congress removed the tax exemption on future issues.

Fort Washington Staff to Commute By River Steamer

Fort Washington, Md., once popular port of call for Potomac River sidewheelers, today resumes a role of nautical prominence—thanks to the rubber and gasoline shortage.

Regular service between Washington and the fort will be instituted at 9:30 a. m., but not for Sunday School picnickers, as in the old days.

Under direction of the War Department the 900-passenger steamer Francis Scott Key, from Miami, Fla., will carry civil service workers, Army personnel, laborers, supplies and equipment to and from the Adjutant General's School now located at the old fort.

The boat will make the 22½-mile round trip half a dozen or so times daily, it was stated yesterday at Fort Washington.

Boy, 11, Killed In Revolver 'Duel' With Playmate

Boston, March 6 (U.P.).—Melvin Osher, 11, of Roxbury, died at a hospital tonight, a few hours after being wounded in an impromptu revolver duel with a 13-year-old playmate.

Held by police as a juvenile delinquent on a murderous assault charge, the older boy told authorities that he suggested a duel—"just like they do in the movies"—while they were playing marbles in his home.

The two stood back-to-back holding pistols which they found in the house and stepped off three paces. Then, the older boy said, he whirled and shot, wounding Osher in the head. Police said the victim's revolver was unloaded.

D. C. to Import Thousands for Housing Work

and related public works is still before Congress.)

A first session of the hearing broke up last Tuesday after building trades labor officials and representatives of the Washington Home Builders Association engaged in a bitter dispute over what evidence was admissible. The hearing was then adjourned until yesterday and later continued until next Tuesday to permit both sides to prepare additional data.

25,000 Imported

Locher disclosed that defense construction in this area has already made enormous demands upon the facilities of building trades unions and has required the importation of at least 25,000 from other areas since the start of the national emergency.

The peacetime building trades membership of 15,000 was swelled by the addition of 10,000 former nonunion workmen living in this area and by 25,000 to 35,000 from other cities here on temporary work permits, he said. A total of 10,000 workmen are working on the new War Department building in Arlington alone, he said.

Locher, a veteran union leader and an iron worker by trade, said his office will be able to handle the recruiting of all necessary workers in spite of many obstacles provided he can promise the out-of-towners full union scale.

"We have pledged the Government to supply all the men it needs on these projects and we will bring them in if they are to be paid scale," he said. "However, if it is decided at the hearing to pay less than scale, we will have to wash our hands of the whole problem because we would not be able to get the workers."

Hard to Find Quarters

He pointed out that most of the newcomers to Washington leave their families at their original homes and maintain two residences for the duration of the job. Because of the Washington housing shortage, they are compelled to pay high rents and often have difficulty finding quarters, he said.

"That is our biggest headache," he said, "getting them a place to live. Fortunately, some have been coming to town in trailers, but others have gone out into the woods and as far away as Baltimore to find living space."

Representatives of the builders contended at the hearing Tuesday that the union scale was 40 to 55 per cent above "prevailing" wages on residential construction here. Locher contends that although the lower wages mentioned by the builders may have been paid in times past, it would be impossible to secure men willing to work for them at this time.

"Why, we have contacted the D. C. Employment Service and have been told that there have not been enough building trades mechanics registered there for the last several months to build a chicken coop."

Forced to Raise Wages

Although employment at the new War Department building has already reached 10,000, he said that engineers on the project are continuing to hire all the skilled workmen who present themselves. The picture is further complicated by the fact that the defense homes must be completed before the War Department will be able to wind up construction and release crews. Many of the homes are desired to house the workers who will be employed in the giant office building as it is completed.

Locher said many nonunion or part union private contractors have been forced to raise wages or appeal to the union for assistance because of the present shortage of men. He cited one case of an apartment building that was started with nonunion labor, but was completed by the higher-priced union labor as a result of the current shortage.

In another case mentioned by Locher, a nonunion contractor from North Carolina with a contract to build a bridge for the War Department signed up with the building trades council after he found other methods of securing labor ineffective.

'Louisiana Purchase' Is Glorified by Technicolor

Bob Hope, Plus Three Original Stage Stars, Scores in Screened Musical Hit at Earle; New Stage Revue, Sans Roxyettes, Cleverly Set

"LOUISIANA PURCHASE." Paramount Technicolor picturization of the musical comedy by Morrie Ryskind and Irving Berlin, adapted to the screen by Jerome Chodorov and Joseph Fields, costarring Bob Hope, Victor Moore, Vera Zorina and Irene Bordoni, with Dona Drake, Raymond Walburn, Maxie Rosenbloom, Frank Albertson, Phyllis Ruth, Donald MacBride, Andrew Tombes, Robert Warwick, Charles La Torre, Charles Lasky, Emory Parnell, Iris Meredith, Catherine Craig, Jack Norton and Sam McDaniel. Directed by Irving Cummings. At the Earle Theater.

MR. B. G. DeSYLVA, as Paramount production chief, has made a mammoth, merry and magnificent Technicolor screen spectacle out of "Louisiana Purchase," the B. G. DeSylva musical comedy hit, for which he wrote the original story, transposed into a libretto by Morrie Ryskind, with music by Irving Berlin.

In adapting this Broadway "smash" to the screen, and the consequent current uses of the Earle Theater, however, Jerome Chodorov and Joseph Fields—authors, incidentally, of "My Sister Eileen," at the National—have largely ignored the lively musical score and have laid their major emphasis on the comedy inherent in the Ryskind book. The three or four numbers that have been retained, nicely complement the development of a boisterously satirical plot that turns out to be a sounder bit of comic dramaturgy than may have been suspected when it was presented on the stage, thickly punctuated with a dozen or so additional musical interruptions.

Washington, having twice reveled in the excitements of the stage version, should need no reminder now that "Louisiana Purchase" concerns itself with business, political and personal complications in a "mythical New Orleans," in the "mythical State of Louisiana," under predatory auspices that are not too difficult to identify. The Louisiana Purchasing Co., is under single-handed investigation by a New England senator, who runs afoul of a directorate that has shifted the entire blame for their iniquities to the crafty shoulders of one Jim Taylor, whom they have made their president and elected to the State Legislature. Mr. Taylor delegates his absolution to a sirenic, delta Mata Hari, who literally gets Senator Oliver P. Loganberry into more hot water than there is in the Arkansas and Yellowstone Park hot springs put together. The solution of all their difficulties on the screen is entirely different from the one that supplied the climax of the stage version, and rather more effective in its employment of an appropriately cockeyed logic.

But it is in its full utilization of the flamboyant beauties of Technicolor photography that "Louisiana Purchase" is most distinguished in its new manifestation. The Mardi Gras scenes, whipped up into major sequences from the stage's colorful suggestions, lend themselves perfectly to pictorial splendors seldom seen and make easy the introduction of "Louisiana Purchase," "You're Lonely and I'm Lonely" and "Tonight at the Mardi Gras" to give the proceedings a tuneful fillip and an excuse for injecting a fleeting glimpse of Zorina's incomparable dancing. In addition to its visual beauty, the picture has movement, a swift and constant flow of comedy, both in line and situation, and the benefit of a top-drawer cast.

Hope Supplants Gaxton Among Original Stars

Bob Hope, of course, is not the overcharged human dynamo that Billy Gaxton is, but in the role of Jim Taylor he demonstrates that he has no superior in extracting every atom of fun from both the dialogue and "business" of the part. He is called upon for a bit of sustained characterization here and gets away with it handsomely enough. Victor Moore, still one of the most hilarious comedians in the theater, loses a little something in the early sequences, but makes it all up once he gets the "feel" of the cameras. Vera Zorina, perhaps the most utterly charming of the contemporary dancing comediennes, and Irene Bordoni, as the volatile proprietress of the Cafe Bordelaise, both owe Technicolor a debt for enhancing their effectiveness. Dona Drake, the new Beatrice, cashes in on her most fruitful opportunity in the song, "Louisiana Purchase," and Phyllis Ruth is engaging in the lesser role of the ingenuous Emmy-Lou. In the masculine support, Raymond Walburn, Maxie Rosenbloom, a mysterious shadow; Frank Albertson, Donald MacBride and Andrew Tombes render yeomen's service. So do the gaudy ladies in an interpolated fashion revue that Technicolor doesn't harm any, either.

Harry Anger's cleverly staged revue, minus the vacationing Roxyettes, presents a group of skillful specialists in a unique setting. The Kim Loo Sisters, a trio of celestial songstresses, who are Oriental only in appearance, get the footlight bill off to a sparkling start and are followed by Jean, Jack and Judy, two lusty girls and a boy, in unusual feats of gymnasticism and tumbling. Mario and Floria, the Earle's headliners for the week, score their accustomed thundering hit in the best dancing that is apt to be seen on any stage. The Six Willys, evenly divided between the sexes, are whirlwind club jugglers and acrobats of top grade. The newsreel, affording first views of American troops in various parts of the world, and a dizzy cartoon comedy, in color, complete an opulent entertainment.

Met's 'Wild Bill Hickok Rides' In Traditional 'Western' Style

By Richard L. Coe

"WILD BILL HICKOK RIDES." Warner Brothers picturization of an original screen play by Charles Grayson, Paul Gerard Smith and Raymond Schrock, with Bruce Cabot, Constance Bennett, Warren William, Ward Bond, Betty Brewer, Walter Catlett, Russell Simpson, Frank Wilcox, Howard da Silva, Lillian Yarbo, J. Farrell MacDonald, Cliff Clark, Julie Bishop, Ray Teal and Dick Bottiler. Directed by Ray Enright. Reviewed Friday afternoon, at the Metropolitan Theater.

Only the other day, astute Adolph Zukor was remarking on the unbeatable appeal of the Westerns. "I could go to a Western every week of my life," allowed the man who started feature pictures on the road to becoming a vital war industry. Made by another company—Warner's—"Wild Bill Hickok Rides" could well be Mr. Zukor's "Western of the week," so packed is it with all the paraphernalia that is the perpetual blessing—or blight—of pioneer epics. This bang-bang saga is on view at the Metropolitan, sharing the screen with a Technicolored Superman and an incredible musical short, about which more later.

"Wild Bill Hickok Rides" embodies all the traditions of the horse opera down to the alluring detail that its shady lady is called Belle. Its earliest focus is on that rather beguiling tangent of the Chicago fire—how were the city's ladies of leisure to maintain their ease in a city of ruin? Thanks to that courtly snake of 1871 which Warren William finds himself playing, the lady whose plight early strikes our sympathy, immediately sets out for Montana along with her girl friends. The soignee Constance Bennett plays this Belle, but Marlene Dietrich beat her to the punch.

Well, anyway, Connie gets aboard a train for the open spaces, planning to set up her gambling establishment under the protection of friend Warren William. And on that train is Wild Bill Hockok of the title . . .

Warners evidently have spared no expense in paying film editors to go through their back files and splice in a few brawl, battle and cattle country scenes, which is, after all, perfectly justifiable use for its celluloid. Bruce Cabot is likable, if not too convincing, as Wild Bill, and J. Farrell MacDonald is briefly amusing as a judge. Walter Catlett works hard with threadbare material and Betty Brewer is tomboyish enough as a youngster for whom Cabott pays off the mortgage.

Yes, Mr. Zukor will find all the ingredients of his Western in this one—not forgetting a completely relentless musical background that saws its way to an inexorable conclusion.

That short subject we hinted about in paragraph one is titled "Calling All Girls" and turns out to be a collection of five of those fantastic dance creations devised by Busby Berkeley for the Warner musical films of 8-10 years ago. You know, those endless vistas of 400 or 500 girls and boys weaving about to the strains of "By a Waterfall," "The Shadow Waltz" or "Shanghai Lil." If you think you must have been dreaming when you saw those battalions of dancers in the "Golddiggers" series in the early 30's, this should prove you were awake, after all. And one of the numbers is solemnly presented as "the most beautiful musical number ever pictured or recorded." It all makes you think of the outlander who was taken to the Radio City Music Hall for the first time. As he hit the street, the bedazzled man was heard to remark: "After all that goings-on I know America will win the war."

The Post's "Superman" is on the Met's screen for a typical example of his derring-do and we couldn't help but find his facile ability to do any old thing, thoroughly refreshing after the troubled exploits of Cabot, Miss Bennett and the devious-minded Busby Berkeley.

A HAT BOX reserved for Winston Churchill's hat which Harry Hopkins had brought back from England. I won that hat from Hopkins' son, David—in a bet about an item he said I had published. If he won I agreed to publish an entire column he'd contribute—a column about the remarkable beauty and talent of his actress-wife, Cherry Preisser, advising producers and movie scouts to sign the one-time partner and elder sister of Screen Actress June Preisser . . . And if I won David agreed to deliver that Churchill hat, to which he had access . . . I won. But David moved to California, nearer the movie scouts. And I'm still waiting for that hat.

A PASS to the Mayor Hague-C. I. O. trial in Newark, N. J. I went there with Walter Winchell. The ride to the Hudson Tubes was his first subway trip . . . We breakfasted early—at 1 p. m.—and arrived at the courthouse at 3. The guards refused to recognize our press passes and a scuffle ensued. After a great deal of pushing, coat tugging and shouting, the door was opened for us and the Marshal conducted us to seats placed inside the railing . . . Hague was on the witness stand. We heard one question put to him. He answered "Yes," and then the judge announced "Recess till tomorrow morning."

RED LABELS bearing skull-and-bones and marked "POISON" . . . A few days before the Overseas Press Club's dinner to Ambassador Litvineff at the Waldorf I had written a story about a dinner Lawrence Steinhardt gave for Litvineff in Moscow—and of the O. G. P. U. men who inspected the food as a precaution. I indicated that the cautious Russians, therefore, might not permit their Ambassador to touch any food at this Waldorf reception attended by 1200 guests . . . The officials of the Overseas, in conclusion with the aggrieved Oscar of the Waldorf, took their revenge by having one of these "POISON" labels pasted, in advance, on each of the eight plates served me.

A NOTE from Dr. Karl Menninger, the psychoanalyst and author of "Man Against Himself," concerning a meeting I had arranged with four men who wanted to talk with him—Moss Hart, Clifford Odets, Artie Shaw and Oscar Levant. The session took place in Lindy's. It consisted wholly of arguments about music between Shaw and Levant, while Odets and Hart argued about social consciousness in playwriting. . . . Dr. Menninger was permitted only to nod and look sagely. After the psychoanalyst left, Shaw, Odets, Levant and Hart were agreed on only one point—that Karl Menninger, at this session, had proved himself a brilliant man.

A PHOTOSTAT of a check issued by Lieut. Gov. Poletti, who had bet me that if LaGuardia beat O'Dwyer his margin of victory would be less than 100,000 votes . . . And so Poletti mailed the check, together with a photostat he obligingly had made for me.

TWO LETTERS, from R. A. F. fliers—brothers, whose family we had known in England, and who later held reunion with us in New York. The first came from Leading Aircraftsman Arthur Bernard, stationed at a training camp in Goderich, Ontario. He conveyed greetings from his father, mother, sister—all engaged in war work in London. "But I haven't heard from my brother, Bill, in a long time, and I'm worried about him," he wrote. "If you should hear any news about him, please let me know" . . . Two days later, from a training camp in Tuscaloosa, Ala., came the second letter, worded almost exactly like the first—except that it was from Aircraftsman Bill Brenard, who inquired whether I had any news about his missing brother, Arthur.

A PAPER WEIGHT made of bronze, and on which appears, in bas relief, a reproduction of the Normandie. It was presented to us by the chief steward, Villar, after our third trip on that vessel . . . He called a cabin boy and instructed him to place that bronze memento in our stateroom. "Who knows?" Villar shrugged. "Someday, perhaps, it may become a precious souvenir."

Comic Bombshells to Buy Some

Hollywood, Calif., Mar. 6.—Bud Abbott and Lou Costello are planning a musical with Broadway trimmings for Hollywood, to donate all profits to a bomber fund. They tell me they won't take another vacation 'til we've whipped the Japs. After "Pardon My Sarong," they'll tour the Nation and figure they ought to rake in $18,000 a week, all of which goes toward buying a bomber. When they return here for "Whodunit," they'll open their musical. Lou says, "If it doesn't go over, we'll close it at the end of the picture and hit the road again."

House Slashes Nearly 2 Million Off Farm Bill

By the Associated Press

The House trimmed $1,300,000 from the Agriculture appropriation bill yesterday, bringing to $1,900,000 the reductions voted since the $895,000,000 measure was called up for debate.

However, the farm bloc successfully resisted efforts to make several other reductions.

Next year's appropriations for the Bureau of Agricultural Economics were cut by one million dollars; and the program for combating Japanese beetles by $300,000.

Representative Case (Republican), of South Dakota, led the fight to cut the $300,000 from the $382,000 for beetle control. He said the insect already was well in hand, and anyway:

"We need this money more for the control of the Japs."

Action Is Not Completed

Far from completing action on the appropriations measure at the day's end, the House decided to consider the measure today. Acrimonious disputes were shaping up over such controversial questions as the sale of Government-held surplus crops below parity and the Farm Security Administration's rehabilitation program.

A determined, but unsuccessful, fight was waged by Representative Monroney (Democrat), of Oklahoma, to cut in half the 16 million dollars scattered through the measure for travel expenses for Agriculture Bureau officials and employes.

He offered close to a dozen amendments for their elimination, many of which went down to defeat by narrow margins.

"Maybe I'll be as unpopular as a skunk in a church," he said, "but it is time to cut down on these overstuffed accounts for traveling bureaucrats."

But opponents of the travel reductions argued that Monroney was offering his amendments without studying the effect they would have on such important tasks as control and eradication of livestock diseases.

Fight on Forest Trails

A move by Representative Rich (Republican), of Pennsylvania, to pare $3,300,000 for construction and maintainance of trails and roads in the Nation's forests was countered by an attempt by Representative Mott (Republican), of Oregon, to add $3,490,165 to the amount for that work. Both amendments were defeated.

Meanwhile, leaders of two organizations claiming a combined membership of a half-million farm families rallied to the defense of the Farm Security Administration, under Congressional attack.

Asserting that FSA's work was "an absolute necessity" for increased food production, James G. Patton, president of the National Farmers Union, and M. W. Thatcher, president of the National Federation of Grain Cooperatives, declared in telegrams to every Representative:

"Any attempt to eliminate aid most essential to America's family-type farmers through the FSA will help the land hogs and prosperous absentee farmers, but will also help Hitler and bring ill will upon all agriculture when supplies run short."

Pedestrians Shun Traffic Signals

either having great faith in the sound judgment of this stranger, or thinking, "Well, if he does it, why can't I?" flood along behind him.

That way a good many persons save 5 seconds.

Of course, it may happen that one unlucky soul will lose 40 years instead. Something of this sort came near to happening yesterday when about 15 persons started east on a "Don't Walk" sign.

Safe—By the Swish of a Skirt

Suddenly, out of the north, roared a bus. The people scurried and two young women talking and laughing to each other almost got bumped into an obituary. They got away by the swish of a skirt.

Once they start across on a "Don't Walk" sign, some of the pedestrians act as though they were in a safety zone. A couple of businessmen will have their heads close together in a discussion. High school girls will be giggling away to each other.

It's pretty much the same way at other "Walk" and "Don't Walk" corners downtown as at Thirteenth and F.

Yet, these "Walk" and "Don't Walk" signs are all in the English language.

Bill Adding 60 To White House Police Approved

An increase of 60 men in the White House Police force, bringing its total to 140, will be enabled under the Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill which awaits President Roosevelt's signature today, following final Congressional action yesterday.

By unanimous consent the House concurred in a Senate amendment to the measure, setting the White House force at a captain, inspector, four lieutenants, six sergeants, and 128 privates. An item of $344,000 in the bill was indorsed to provide the increased force.

The present White House force has been supplemented by between 50 and 60 Metropolitan force men who have been detailed to guard duty at the Executive Mansion.

Typewriter Dealers Fear Business Ruin

More than 5000 small dealers and distributors throughout the Nation will be forced out of business immediately unless the War Production Board rescinds, or at least modifies its order restricting the sale and rental of typewriters, Clarence E. Bush, president of the Washington Typewriter Dealers Association, declared last night.

More than 30 Washington dealers and between 1500 and 1800 employes, including salesmen, mechanics and clerks, are affected by the order.

The order, which became effective Thursday at midnight, prohibits the sale or rental of typewriters to any person, without the express permission of the Director of Industries Operation, WPB. Machines rented out at the time of the order's issuance must be returned to the dealer by April 1.

In commenting upon the order, Bush said that the most severe provision was that curtailing the renting of typewriters. "Unless the dealers can rent their machines, they cannot exist. The income derived from rental fees is the very backbone of our business," he said.

6000 Rented Weekly Here

The number of machines now in use on a rental basis over the entire country is difficult to estimate but it runs into the hundreds of thousands. Washington, which has one of the largest renting demands of any city in the country, has a weekly turnover in excess of 6000, the association leader added. "There is no sense to the rental restrictions whatever," Bush said; "if we are allowed to rent the same number of machines as before the order, we can continue to operate."

Yesterday afternoon Bush presented the views of the typewriter dealers to officials of the War Production Board and asked that they reconsider. Officials promised they would "consider" the typewriter dealers' statement, but that no definite answer could be given immediately.

Seven representative Washington dealers interviewed yesterday stressed that while they were willing to cooperate with the Government they were equally unanimous in their pessimistic outlook for the future.

As an alternative to the immediate cutoff of typewriters, Bush suggested:

"That the Government immediately inventory the stock of typewriters now available and estimate and segregate the amount of the total necessary for Government or essential industry use. The balance, then, can be left with the dealers to dispose of as they see fit. Sales would be few, since the dealers would certainly rent rather than sell. Most dealers will go a long way to supply the Government with their quota."

Dealers Retain Title

In further stressing harshness of the order, Bush pointed out the Government had apparently lost sight of the fact that dealers, by retaining title to the machines, did not lose control of them. "They can always be recalled at the end of a rental contract," he stated.

Bush said also that it was impossible to guess how farreaching the effects of the order were. As an example, he cited the thousands of business executives visiting Washington, engaged in Government business and usually requiring typewriters. Until contracts between private industry and Government agencies have been completed, those industries cannot be regarded as essential. How they will be supplied in the meantime, Bush said he did not know.

Leniency Hope

Hill, Ex-Aide To Fish, Will Not Appeal

By Dillard Stokes
Post Staff Writer

George Hill, 45, who lied under oath to cover up what he, and others, did for the Nazi propaganda machine, gave up the appeal of his perjury conviction yesterday.

Hill hopes that Justice F. Dickinson Letts will have mercy on him, and cut down his two to six-year prison sentence. Hill has been in jail six weeks. The justice will hear his plea in a few days, when he has disposed of the case of the master German agent, George Sylvester Viereck, who was convicted night before last.

Hill says he has had no promise of leniency.

But he now feels that he was "ill-advised and deceived by his seeming friends," who used him "as a tool for their own purposes," it was learned yesterday.

When he wanted to tell what he knew, he claims, he was prevented, being told "you must be nuts," and "you would not rat on them, would you?"

Deep Repentance

And he rests his hope on "deep repentance" and the fact that he has done all he can to make up for his previous effort to obstruct justice.

Special Prosecutor William Power Maloney said Thursday that Hill "took the rap to shield" Representative Hamilton Fish.

A few months ago Hill was a secretary of Representative Fish. He was widely known and well liked on Capitol Hill, where he had worked a score of years. But beside his official job, he had become a cog in the machine which used the Congress to spread propaganda for Adolf Hitler.

From Viereck's operatives, Hill got manuscripts which he had placed in the Congressional Record by Senators and Representatives. Later, with money that came originally from Viereck, Hill bought reprints by the ton, and the Nazi propaganda agencies mailed them postage free. When the special grand jury on Axis agents began an inquiry, Hill helped spirit away some evidence. Then he denied this and denied knowing Viereck.

O'Connor His Counsel

When Hill was indicted on two counts of corrupt perjury, former Representative John J. O'Connor showed up to act as his lawyer. O'Connor was vice chairman of an isolationist committee set up by Fish before Fish went to Germany in 1939, and declared Hitler's demands on Poland were just.

When the special grand jury sent for Fish, O'Connor did his best to save the Congressman from having to testify. His other client, Hill, gave no more testimony, even when on trial for perjury.

After Hill was convicted, O'Connor dropped the case.

Then Hill talked before the grand jury and as a witness against Viereck, saying O'Connor prevented his telling the truth when he wanted to do so, a few days after he was indicted.

It was Fish, Hill said, who introduced him to Viereck and told him to work for the German agent. Under oath, Fish said that he did not recall this.

But he would not deny it.

Coastal Cities Get First Slice Of OCD Funds

First allocation of firefighting and other air-raid equipment purchased under the 100 million dollars Congressional appropriation to the Office of Civilian Defense will be made to "certain cities within 300-mile coastal strips," Director James M. Landis announced yesterday.

Washington is included in the cities, the Office of Civilian Defense assured last night.

Priorities among the selected cities, Director Landis said, will be based on likelihood of attack, vulnerability, and importance to war production of manufacturing plants in the community.

Relative sizes of communities may sometimes have little bearing on the amount of equipment allocated, it was declared. All allotments have been arrived at in cooperation with military experts of the War Department, Landis declared.

Breakdowns on amounts of material to be expected by enrolled civilian defense volunteers were given as follows: arm bands on the basis of 60 per 1000 population; gas-proof capes on the basis of 30 per 1000 population; steel helmets on the basis of 20 per 1000 population; firemen's turn-out coats and pants on the basis of 4 per 1000 population; gas protective clothing on the basis of 4 sets per 1000 population; stretchers on the basis of 4 for each 5000 population; cots on basis of 12 for each 5000 population; first aid belts on basis of 9 per 5000 population; identification tags for medical kits on basis of 1 book of 20 tags for each 1000 population.

Rubber boots for firemen, at first scheduled for purchase, now will not be available, Landis said, pointing out that priorities have been secured for all the materials and that purchasing will begin immediately.

Gas masks for the civilian population will not be purchased, he said, until facilities have been created for quantity manufacture of them. Types of pumpers to be furnished fire auxiliaries have been worked out in cooperation with the War Production Board, he said.

Supreme Court Admits Husband, Wife to Practice

In a joint ceremony, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas F. Gowen, of 1243 Rock Creek Ford Drive Northwest, were admitted to practice yesterday before the Supreme Court.

Classmates at the local Columbus University Law School, where they finished their studies in 1936, Mr. and Mrs. Gowen practiced law here before he went with the War Department as an attorney and she, with the Coast Guard.

They were presented to the court by Marcus Borachardt, Washington lawyer, and former assistant to the Attorney General.

Grand Jury Hears Mrs. McLean

Mrs. Evalyn Walsh McLean yesterday went before the District grand jury, on a special invitation from the jurors, to make a complaint against the magazine, The New Masses, which in a recent issue charged that the society hostess' home was the headquarters for an American "Cliveden set."

Assistant United States Attorney Cecil Heflin represented the district attorney's office in presentation of the case.

Army Revives Canister-Type Ammunition

A type of ammunition which created terrible havoc in the days of smooth-bore, muzzle-loading artillery has been revived by the United States Army for the newest type of land combat.

Canister will be used, the War Department announced yesterday, as tank ammunition against machine-gun nests because of its widespread destructiveness. At the same time it was announced that shrapnel, used by all powers in the last World War, had been stricken from the list of modern ammunition as less effective than high explosive shell.

Designed for use against personnel, canister consists of a tin can containing 122 balls about ⅝ of an inch in diameter. When fired, the can bursts from centrifugal force soon after it leaves the muzzle, scattering its shot with devastating effect at ranges up to 400 yards.

Shrapnel is a shell within a shell. A powder charge in the base of the shell is fired by a time fuse, causing the shell to burst over its target, scattering small shot. It was invented in 1784 and has been widely used since.

Canister, the announcement said, will be made for the 37-millimeter antitank gun and for the Army's new 57-millimeter gun.

Huge New Red Armies Sweep Nazis Before Them

German airdromes, and lost 14 planes.

Later a special communique said the Russian Army killed 40,000 Germans on the central front west of this capital between February 6 and March 5.

In the last month 283 populated places have been freed from the invader, the communique added.

Among the booty listed as captured were:

Forty-three tanks, 285 guns, 28 aircraft, 4 gliders, 794 trucks, 1012 horses, 16 locomotives and 595 railway cars.

The Soviet radio reported that "millions" of fresh and fully equipped Red army troops had gone into action on many Russian fronts, launching new offensives which were crushing German resistance despite the widespread use of reserves earmarked for the spring offensive.

"In a vain effort to halt our advance, Adolf Hitler is throwing in more and more cannon fodder," a Moscow broadcast said. "But the Soviet troops are crushing his new and old armies, as well as the much heralded spring reserves."

The Red army long has been training vast numbers of reserves far behind the lines. The announcement that they were in action by the "millions" was the first indication of their wholesale use.

Latest reports from the central front said the Russians continued to overcome German resistance, pursuing the enemy and inflicting heavy casualties, after the capture of Yukhnov on the southeastern curve of the Smolensk salient.

The Moscow radio said the Soviet forces were pressing west from Yukhnov after routing the 260th, 263rd and 131st German infantry divisions.

Ilya Ehrenbourg, Soviet war correspondent, gave the following account of the capture of Yukhnov:

"Fighting for the town lasted several weeks. Our troops ground to dust quite a few German regiments. The enemy repeatedly rushed up reserves, now two fresh battalions, now a dozen tanks. We saw German soldiers hurriedly brought up from France.

"Only six days ago German headquarters stated that German troops were holding the most important strongholds of Yukhnov, Vyazma and Rzhev. Today one link of this chain is missing. A frosty sun shines on the ruins of Yukhnov. Many houses were burned."

The Moscow radio said that in breaking up attempts to supply the German army trapped at Staraya Russa by air, Soviet planes found an enemy airdrome and set fire to 20 planes, then in a second attack bombed about 30 transport planes which had just landed.

Simple Life Lesson Of War, Says Cleric

Conflict Will Reconcile Men's Views, Asserts Dr. Anderson at Penn Theater

An appreciation of the virtues of simple living is one of the values that will survive the war, predicted the Rev. Dr. Howard Stone Anderson in yesterday's Lenten message at Southeast churches' Lenten services at the Penn Theater.

He is pastor of First Congregational Church and president of the Washington Ministerial Union.

He voiced the conviction that the war would also bring men closer together, pointing out that "communication and common sense will show that isolationism will be impossible in the postwar world order."

Dr. Anderson also predicted that truth and an appreciation of the sacredness of human personality will survive the war. He quoted an old German proverb to the effect that "lies have short legs."

"The word "peace" today is like the memory of a far off blessing," said the Very Rev. Chester B. Emerson in a Lenten sermon at Epiphany Episcopal Church, 1317 G Street Northwest. He is dean of Trinity Cathedral, Cleveland, Ohio.

"We are living through a time of so much confusion and fear that hopefulness is not only rare but the kind of attitude for which the average man seems apologetic. We are suffering from the inevitable reactions of war, but beside this there is some deep-seated difficulty within our own souls which we need to meet and master," he said.

Speaking at a laymen's Lenten service in the same church later in the day, Mr. R. Keith Kane said that the only kind of world which offers man a happier life than the human family has yet known is the one founded upon the fredoms—the freedoms to speak, to worship, to live, and to work.

"There must be freedom to worship throughout the world," he emphasized. "The self-determination which it espouses must be not for some peoples but all peoples. The Four Freedoms cannot be for the privilege of a few. They must be extended, as a matter of right, to all men of all races and creeds. And they must be extended, not in some nebulous future, but progressively and ever-increasingly, beginning now."

Mr. Kane is a prominent Episcopal layman and leader in the church's forward movement. He is connected with the firm of Cadwalader, Wickersham & Taft in New York City, and has been granted a leave of absence for special Government work. He is a vestryman of the Church of the Resurrection, New York.

Southeast Speakers

Speakers at the Southeast churches' services during the coming week will be the Rev. John G. Magee, assistant rector, St. John's Episcopal Church, Monday; the Rev. Robert J. Plumb, St. Mark's Episcopal Church, Tuesday; the Rev. Walton McMillan, Wednesday; Col. Walter B. Zimmerman, Thursday, and the Rev. Dr. John W. Rustin, Friday.

The Rev. Samuel M. Shoemaker, rector of Calvary Episcopal Church, New York City, will speak Monday through Friday at 12 noon at Epiphany Episcopal Church, 1317 G Street Northwest. He is well-known in the Oxford Group movement.

Bishop Edwin Holt Hughes, retired Methodist resident prelate, will speak Thursday at 8 p. m. at All Saints' Episcopal Church, Chevy Chase, at community Lenten services.

The weekly Federation of Churches' Lenten services will be held Wednesday at 5 p. m. at Epiphany Church, with the Rev. Dr. John W. Rustin, pastor of Mount Vernon Place Methodist Church and federation vice president, preaching.

Dr. Blackwelder to Speak

The Rev. Dr. Oscar F. Blackwelder, president of the Washington Federation of Churches, will address Lenten vespers Wednesday at 8 p. m. at the Columbian House, George Washington University.

Churches of the upper Sixteenth and Fourteenth Street areas will hold joint worship services Thursday at 8 p. m. at the Lutheran Church of the Incarnation, Fourteenth and Gallatin Streets Northwest. The Rev. Dr. Harry W. Burgan, pastor of Hamline Methodist Church, will preach on "The Unchanged Gospel."

Church Funds Drive Slated to Open April 15

The Washington Federation of Churches, representative body of 167 Protestant churches and allied agencies in the Metropolitan area, will launch its annual financial drive April 15, continuing through May 1. This year's goal is $38,000.

The campaign will be conducted under the leadership of Walter Britt, chairman of the federation's financial committee, and a prominent layman of First Congregational Church, and the Rev. Walter G. Borchers, jr., the federation's administrative assistant and financial secretary.

The increase in the budget is necessitated by the federation's reorganization and expansion of services to Washington churches, particularly in the field of programs for servicemen and newcomers here in defense work.

Leaders in District recreation, health, civilian defense and other fields will address the annual meeting of the social walfare department, Washington Federation of Churches, March 10 at 2 p. m. at Mount Vernon Place Methodist Church, Ninth and Massachusetts Avenue Northwest. The Rev. Francis W. McPeek is department director.

They will include Dr. George C. Ruhland, District health official; Mrs. Helen Duey Hoffman, executive secretary, Washington Urban League; Mrs. Frank A. Linzel, chairman of child care and protection committee, metropolitan area, civilian defense; Hugo Wolters, executive director of the recreational services, metropolitan area, civilian defense, and Conrad Van Hyning, director of the District Board of Public Welfare.

The Rev. Clarence W. Cranford, new pastor of Calvary Baptist Church, will lead devotions. The Rev. F. Bland Tucker, chairman of the federation's social welfare committee, will preside.

Choral Society Will Carry On

The Washington Choral Society, with more than 100 singers, will carry on its program "for the duration," despite the numerous inroads made on its personnel, it was announced yesterday.

The society is planning a diversified program adapted to the national emergency, and many programs are being arranged in cooperation with civic defense leaders in the metropolitan area, it was said.

Myron Whitney is society president and Louis A. Potter, director.

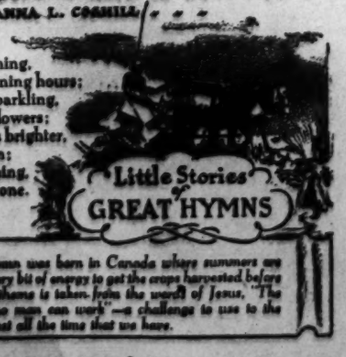
"WORK, FOR THE NIGHT IS COMING"
ANNA L. COSMILE



Work, for the night is coming,
Work through the morning hours;
Work while the dew is sparkling,
Work 'mid springing flowers;
Work while the day grows brighter,
Under the glowing sun;
Work, for the night is coming,
When man's work is done.

The author of this hymn was born in Canada where summers are short and call forth every bit of energy to get the crops harvested before the early frosts. The theme is taken from the words of Jesus, "The night cometh when no man can work"—a challenge to use to the utmost all the time that we have.

Raw Material Shortage Hits War Program

William H. Harrison, production division chief of the War Production Board, disclosed yesterday that the war program had reached such magnitude that it was beginning to be limited more by shortages of raw materials than by lack of machines.

He told reporters that airplane production, although ahead of schedule, is being held back by shortages of aluminum forgings and parts, and that a "rather disappointing" month of shipbuilding could be ascribed in part to lack of steel plates last fall.

He said that he hoped the steel situation largely had been cured, but that the lost time could not be made up.

Meantime, it was announced that restrictions on the war production program would be discussed by WPB Chief Donald M. Nelson in his next radio broadcast to the Nation, at 10:15 p. m. Tuesday, over the Mutual network. Nelson is expected to discuss what he expects from management and labor in removing unnecessary barriers to increased production with present machines.

Harrison declared that Nelson's campaign to lift present production by 25 per cent on existing facilities, plus every other acceleration and exansion device the Nation could command would be necessary if the President's war production goal was to be achieved.

At present, he explained, that program is still largely in the contracting and negotiating stage and it is impossible to forecast just how much will be produced during the rest of the year. He admitted that the outlook for shipping was "very good" and that warplane production could be higher with additional materials. He said he foresaw "nothing to indicate that the goal is impossible of achievement."

Although there are exceptions, he said that in general, materials assume first rank as the limiting production factor, with skilled labor in the second category of shortages and lack of machines in third place.

Painfully Slow

Warworkers who continue to flock to Washington by the thousands each week must find the indecision of Congress in dealing with the emergency housing bill for this area particularly painful. Week after week discussion of this bill goes forward. It has now passed both the House and Senate. Still the Public Buildings and Grounds Committee of the House proposes to conduct further hearings next week on the amendments added by the Senate.

Bills carrying billions of dollars to finance the war are rushed through in record time. But this 70-million-dollar emergency measure to prepare the Capital for its part in the war has to be examined with a microscope. Surely the House committee could rely upon the testimony presented to the Senate in support of the additional urgent projects added by that body. So far as housing and utilities for warworkers are concerned, moreover, the most vital question is whether priorities can be obtained. Congress can make no mistake by authorizing an ample fund that will permit intelligent planning to meet the city's pressing requirements as rapidly as materials can be secured.

Wasting Copper

The report of the House Military Affairs Committee, which has been investigating the wastage of copper by the Rural Electrification Administration, has stirred up an old controversy. There is much dispute as to the facts and as to the implications which should be drawn from those facts. The public power advocates are loath to see the work of the REA interrupted in any way, and private power interests would like to see it wiped out. What is most disturbing about this House committee report is its clear indication that this petty fight between the power trust and the public power bloc is still going on to the detriment of our ability to hit back at the Japanese and the Nazis.

Bias against the development of public power projects stands out from the majority report in various places. That bias seems to be more than counterbalanced, however, by disregard of the national interest on the part of some administrative officials. On December 11, for example, the SPAB issued an order to halt the use of copper on projects less than 40 per cent completed. In spite of the order, two cooperatives sponsored by the REA went ahead with work on projects that were less than 25 per cent complete. That fact was reported by the Army's Corps of Engineers. The engineers also reported that these projects "are duplications of existing facilities and at present have arranged to serve only customers which are already being served from existing facilities."

The War Production Board allowed some of this work to go ahead, despite the Engineer Corps' report. Apparently, however, the segments of the lines for which priorities were granted were much nearer completion than the projects as a whole.

As to the Ark-La project sponsored by the REA, the House Committee complains that that project was granted priorities "over the adverse findings and recommendations of both the Department of Public Utilities of Arkansas and the Army and Navy Munitions Board." The committee majority found that construction of this REA line to serve an aluminum plant at Lake Catherine, Ark., is not necessary; that it "duplicates existing facilities"; and that it will "waste over three-quarter million pounds of copper and large quantities of other critical materials." That is a grave charge. It demands forthright explanations from both the REA and the War Production Board.

Further charges by the committee should be addressed to Congress. It accuses the REA of planning, under the disguise of war projects, many large generating plants and transmission lines "which duplicate existing facilities and waste tremendous amounts of copper." The report also implies that the REA is exceeding its authority. That is no problem to dump into the lap of the WPB. Congress itself ought to determine whether the REA is serving the function for which it was created and whether it has any basic usefulness in wartime. When Congress creates administrative agencies and gives them millions to spend largely at their own discretion, it can scarcely expect the WPB to keep those agencies fully in line with changing national policies. That is the business of Congress itself.

Biddling

The battle cry of another of the private wars which are being waged at the expense of the war effort was sounded on Thursday night by Attorney General Biddle. He was speaking at a Washington gathering of New Dealers called by the New Republic newspaper. Regardless of the war, he told his hearers, they must keep up the political fight for the "liberalism" of the New Deal.

What did the Attorney General mean? In the light of New Deal philosophy, which is intended to provide a more abundant life for everybody who is not in the high-income brackets, the answer is easy. The farm bloc must be sustained in its fight for bigger and better bounties. Labor must be encouraged to keep the 40-hour week, and at the same time to better its living standards. Redistribution of the national income among the underprivileged must go on. All these are New Deal standards, and, regardless of the war, the fight to attain them, according to Mr. Biddle, must be continued.

How those standards can be maintained, how, where they have not yet been attained, they can be improved—those are questions which the Attorney General should answer. He cannot answer them. That is to say, he cannot answer them and at the same time tell the country how our war effort can be made and victory assured.

Our war task, on the contrary, can be accomplished only by the abandonment of the more abundant life, even of the ordinarily abundant life. Here we are at war with two rampant warrior races which have got a head start in a career of world conquest aimed at finishing up in the United States. Our lack of trained men, our lack of finished tools, have thrust us on the defensive. In order to make up for lost time, we have dedicated this year to a herculean program of work and sacrifice. It calls—the President calls—for the diversion of 50 per cent of the national income to warmaking—for going without consumer goods in order to make war goods fast.

For this purpose, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, a serious labor shortage is already in sight. That means that the men in industry must work harder to attain the President's goals. But New Dealism still insists on the 40-hour week. To be sure, the workers could work longer, but the overtime is so exorbitant that few employers can pay it. And the New Dealers made overtime exorbitant purposely—in order to discourage work beyond 40 hours. Is this the way to catch up and beat the Germans and the Japanese in making the tools of war? Of course not. We are trying to do in a year what it took them from six to ten years to do, and they are still working longer and harder than our people. In Germany the pace in some instances is 70 hours a week.

The same addiction to "liberalism" in favor of the farmer would be equally suicidal. Already the farmers of this country are assured of parity incomes. They have just come through a record year for farm income. Yet the farm bloc insists upon parity prices for a line of farm products—a demand which would cripple the war effort. We could not supply our Allies under the food-for-freedom program, and our own living costs would soar. Moreover, the workers, unable to buy enough on existing wages, would demand more money. The result would be to ruin the economy and the dollar in a dog-fight between higher prices and higher wages which in the end would crush the rest of the community.

But the Attorney General seems to approve this type of liberalism. Perhaps he also approves the artful dodger tactics of tying farm demands to war appropriations. Regardless of the war, to use his words, the farm politicians insist on getting theirs, even if it means staging a holdup of the war effort.

The fact of the matter is that our task can be accomplished only by turning our backs on the New Deal and the more abundant life.

That is perfectly obvious from the very meaning of sacrifice. Not more, but less, can be enjoyed. If 50 per cent of the national income is to be mobilized for war, that means 50 per cent of the national production. Half the facilities which normally make necessities and amenities and luxuries, in other words, must be converted to warmaking. So there will be fewer goods to distribute, let alone redistribute. But money in record volume is being paid out for work on the nonconsumption war output—money with no place to go except into higher prices, since it will not create more things to buy. Thus the problem is to mop up the surplus money by taxation and other means, not to shovel out more in quest of a mythical abundance.

Mr. Biddle would have been more honest if he had said that because of the war the fight to realize the New Deal philosophy must be waived for the duration.

Juggling With A Word

Randolph Paul, Treasury tax adviser, told the Ways and Means Committee that a sales tax would be "inflationary," because it would raise living costs and stimulate demands for wage increases. This perversion of the meaning of the world inflation is evidently designed to strengthen opposition to any general sales tax. It is true, as Secretary Morgenthau told the committee, that a general sales tax would bear heavily on low-income groups and encroach upon living standards by raising the prices of consumer goods. But these basic defects of general sales taxation become positive advantages in time of war when the living standards of all the people (including those in low-income groups) must be reduced in order to release vast quantities of goods and services for combat purposes. Essential reductions in general consumption can be assured by adding the amount of sales taxes to the prices charged consumers.

To say that the resultant price rise is "inflationary" is a plain juggling with words. For the seller is acting merely as a collecting agency for the Government when he pays sales taxes and adds them to the consumer's bill. There are no extra profits for the seller, as there would be in case of genuine inflation. Inflation is caused by a rise in money income at a rate outstripping increases in the volume of goods for sale. Moreover, inflationary price increases provide no certain or direct additions to the tax revenue of the Government.

Of course, taxes, whether levied directly on income or indirectly on consumer goods, lower living standards and make price control more difficult by stimulating demands for higher wages and salaries. But should we on that account eschew taxation of millions of the Nation's wage earners, permitting them to spend all or most of their enhanced money earnings without offsetting tax deductions? The reasons given by the Treasury for its avoidance of general sales taxation and its failure to ask for lowered exemptions on incomes subject to tax certainly lead to that pusillanimous conclusion. Yet the Treasury must know that any tax program which fails to reach the average American working family would unleash dangerously inflationary forces. On the other hand, price increases resulting from excise taxes, general and specific, are limited in amount and can be adjusted if necessary by changing tax schedules.

To be sure, if wage increases are granted to offset every rise in living costs, a sales tax would assist an inflationary spiraling of production costs instead of helping to mop up excess purchasing power and preventing inflation. Similar results would follow, however, if every addition to direct income taxes were to be made an excuse for demanding higher wages. All of which is equivalent to saying that even the most drastic tax program cannot protect this country against inflation unless the Administration has the nerve to buttress its tax program by establishing a firm control over wages as well as commodity prices.

Tom Mooney

These three years since Tom Mooney's release from San Quentin Prison have been so eventful and catastrophic that when death brought his name once more into the news yesterday it was like a name remembered from a long-past time. We were astonished to discover we had almost forgotten him. Yet at one time it was a name that was known in almost every corner of the world—a symbolic name which far transcended Mooney's importance as an individual. Just as, in the 1890's, the name Dreyfus had become a symbol of what then seemed a final struggle between monarchist-military reactionism on the one side and bourgeois-anticlerical radicalism on the other, so Mooney became a symbol of the economic class struggle.

The fact that the Mooney case could occupy world attention for more than a score of years shows how devoutly both Mooney's champions and Mooney's enemies believed in the reality of that struggle. There is no other way to explain either the world-wide agitation for his freedom or the stubbornness with which all efforts in his behalf were opposed. It explains also the atmosphere of passion and prejudice in which the case was everywhere mooted.

It was this atmosphere which prevented the question from turning on the simple point of justice. This was true even after the evidence on which Mooney and Warren Billings were convicted of the Preparedness Day bomb murders in 1916 had been discredited bit by bit. Thus the Mooney case is a lesson in how dangerous it is to permit selfish interest or expediency to obscure the sense of justice even when only the life of one individual is involved.

REVELATION

Today, for a moment, the earth stood still,
And I saw a man ploughing with beauty and skill.

With grace notes flung on a far, deep sky
A meadow lark sang in a field nearby.
And the richness of life surged clean and proud
Through the sky, field, and song and a furrow ploughed.

Blackout Suggestions

I had occasion to be out during the blackout. If the response of the whole city was like that of the districts I traversed, I want to congratulate the citizenry on their realization of the needs of the situation and their wholehearted cooperation. I saw only two windows through which any light penetrated, one around the edges, the other through material not quite opaque enough.

Several suggestions occur to me as to future blackout tests.

1. Preparations should be on a permanent, not a temporary basis, ready to be put into effect instantly when a warning is given. In one rooming house I know about a good part of yesterday was spent in making preparations most of which are coming down today. Such temporary treatment is of no value for real raids which will not be announced several days in advance. If future blackouts are to be precautionary all-night affairs, as I understand is the case in London, permanent arrangements to darken the whole house might be in order. If they are to be of short duration and made effective upon signal, the portion of the house deemed best for temporary retreat should be permanently darkened. In either case, the preparations should be permanent, and available on short notice.

2. To drive this home, subsequent tests should be unannounced.

3. Regulations affecting automobiles should now be publicized and tested.

4. Finally, short but complete blackouts should be rehearsed, with Government buildings and street lights being turned off also. And to insure completeness, observation should be made from the air. Skylights cannot be observed by wardens from the ground.

Diphtheria And Smallpox

In reading the editorial "Invisible Front" in yesterday's Post, I wondered whether you were aware of the campaign sponsored by the Children's Bureau and launched by a Presidential proclamation asking that all children in the United States be immunized against smallpox and diphtheria before May 1, which is Child Health Day.

We have sufficient immunization serum in this country to protect all children against these diseases, yet last year 1368 cases of small pox occurred and 16,922 cases of diphtheria, the majority of which were children. Figures for the current year indicate that diphtheria is on the rise. We also recall that following the World War there was a serious epidemic of smallpox in the United States with approximately 200,000 cases reported in a period of two years.

Americans should feel it a duty and a privilege to eradicate these two preventable diseases, and they might well take heed of the warning contained in recent news dispatches from Greece, where from 700 to 800 children are said to be dying daily of this one disease.

Medical authorities say that 90 per cent of all children are susceptible to diphtheria. The best age for immunization is at the end of the child's first year between the ninth and twelfth month. The spring months are a particularly good period for carrying out a universal immunization project, since the toxoid affords protection only after an interval of from four to six months and since diphtheria epidemics are at their height from November to January. Children immunized before May 1 should therefore be safe at the period of greatest hazard next autumn.

Labor Policy

There is one conspicuous public question in which both the views of the people and the responsibility of our leaders have failed to bring results—we have failed to establish a national labor policy. We know the people and labor union members, by a very large majority, have expressed the opinion that strikes or contentions for a closed shop should be eliminated and that they do not see eye to eye with labor leaders who lend themselvs to such efforts.

Gen. MacArthur, in exercising his proven wisdom, was able to bring about unity of Filipino soldiery with the American forces, hence we are now pointing with pride to his leadership and their achievements but, at home, our wisdom seems to lack what it takes to persuade the President and Congress into a unity sufficient to establish a labor policy, although our production is hampered and prolongation of war thereby encouraged.

Looking back at the various warning speeches and utterances by the President that were followed by his creation of the National Labor Mediation Board, its failure and his second creation of a National Mediation Board, we can now see that these gestures, whether intended so or not, were really spellbinders contributing to a continuation of coddling labor and we are just as far from a definite labor policy in our Government as if we had never heard of strikes or production slowups.

Congress has made some efforts with respect to our labor problems without success. However, that indicates Congress is conscious of a sense of responsibility, and we should therefore direct our appeals to Senators and Representatives in our hope for constructive legislation in establishing a national labor policy that will serve the best interest of all, including labor, while our Nation is struggling in a world-wide war.

Placing Blame

Certainly the men responsible for the disaster at Pearl Harbor should be court-martialed. But are they alone to blame?

How about the brass hats who fought an increase in the Air Corps? How about the members of Congress who refused to vote the money to fortify Guam? How about the lone eagles and poor fishes who lulled us to sleep, saying "America never can or will be attacked?"

Yes, consider the industrialists who insisted on "business as usual," and had us caught unprepared. Consider the millionaires who made their piles selling scrap iron to the Land of the Rising Sun. Remember our statesmen who made us junk our fleet after the Disarmament Conference, while Japan kept hers.

Were not all of them derelict in their duty, or were they just dumb? What should be done to them?

To win victories we must first learn where to place blame and remove the cause of defeats.

A little purge now and then is well for nations as for men.

48-Hour Week

In the talk about a 48-hour week, before the Saturday half-day is taken away, reasonable consideration should be given to local conditions.

The offices generally are on five days of eight hours. The length of time people have to wait for street cars and buses and to consume in getting to their homes is far greater than in normal times. Our summers run mighty hot on the average. Leave is practically not allowed.

With daylight saving, even if another hour there is not added, as has been discussed, a weekend beginning after a half day on Saturday (particularly for those whose workday commences early) would be not only a blessing but an aid to a more efficient performance the following week. I have never owned a summer cottage, yet many employes do own them, and ought to have some time in which to use them to good advantage. There are plenty of them for rent also, which would aid our housing situation if two or three couples would join in having a delightful summer, even without leave, with swimming, boating, fishing, crabbing, etc. An outboard motor affords lots of inexpensive pleasure.

Also, because of the local congestion, clerks lose additional time in getting meals at eating places—waits up to 15 or more minutes being very frequent, and also in necessary shopping.

Congress knows how hot Washington gets in summer. If a 48-hour week is to be required, despite these conditions above set forth, surely, it seems that Saturday in June, July, August and September should be only a four-hour day.

Juvenile Tire Thieves

Steps are being taken to impose severe penalties upon tire thieves. Unless the proposed legislation takes juvenile tire thieves from under the protection of the Juvenile Court it will accomplish nothing.

One of the weaknesses of our democracy is the coddling of our criminal youth. Before this war is over we shall probably see boys of 18 called for military service, but in the meantime we protect the criminal of that age and shield him from the consequences of his wrongdoing.

Individuals who have been repeatedly caught by the police robbing parking meters have been freed by the Juvenile Court time after time. Juveniles are among the worst offenders with respect to purse snatchings. Any legislation aimed at tire thieves must remove juvenile tire thieves from the protection of the Juvenile Court laws if anything is to be accomplished.

Furnished Apartments

I find here people who rent furnished apartments ask 50 per cent above the rent of the unfurnished apartment. It seems to me that is a lot of money to have to pay for someone's old furniture when, for the same amount or less, you can buy new furniture if an unfurnished flat could be secured. I think that taking advantage in this manner of people who have to come here to work is most unpatriotic and not helpful to the ideals which we are now fighting for.

My Island Pals

I can't help but wonder how some of my old pals in the islands have made out under the rule of the Jap. Those in Cavite, for instance. There was Dave DeMuth who worked with "facts and figgers" in the navy yard for years. He made one trip to the States in the twenties but soon returned, saying he meant to be a sunshiner for the rest of his days. A neat dresser, in white ducks and carrying a stingeree swagger stick, Dave made his early morning walk through the Paranaque district before going to work and took his evening swim at Canacao Beach before his dinner. Three glasses of San Miguil beer, sipped slowly in the New York Bar, was his nightcap. He had a slow, grave smile for everyone. Was he a victim of the reported "vicious" raids just before the fall of Cavite? Was he "evacuated?" If so, to where?

There was "Red" King who operated a restaurant. He was married to a Filipino and had two beautiful daughters and a son, all of them red-headed like himself. He loved his family. Did they get out of Cavite alive? I like to think that Red took a couple of shots at the Japs before he left. He probably did. He was that sort of a cookie.

"Iron Bux?" What of him? No one knew his real name. He was a quarter Portuguese, a quarter Chinese and half East Indian. He came to the islands from Hongkong. He battled his way to lightweight boxing championship of the islands and for years whipped all the talent they could import from Australia and the States. Eventually he wore himself out as a boxer and went to work in the navy yard as a mechanic. He was married to an Albanian woman and had several children. It would be like "Bux" to gather up his family and take to the jungle. He, too, worshiped his children.

There was "Dolly" Dunn, who owned the Bachelor Inn. Originally from Kentucky, he had been christened Darly Dunn. Perhaps he got the nickname because he was anything but doll-like. He was a big, good-natured fellow with peculiar characteristics. Cavite is a sailor town. Fights on the waterfront are frequent. "Dolly" wasn't quarrelsome but because he had the reputation of being the "best man" in the islands in a rough and tumble scrap, he was frequently challenged. I've seen "Dolly" stand up to hard punishment and come out the winner. Yet, one day I saw him faint when he cut his finger. He always looked well-nourished and had a healthy color. Yet, he was continually complaining of aches and pains—he had eaten something which didn't agree with him—he had a stiff neck—he had a pain in his chest—he wondered if his heart was "going back" on him.

Three of us framed him one morning. One by one we dropped in on him and told him he looked terrible. We told him his eyes looked bad, that he was pale and that he didn't appear to be breathing properly. At 2 that afternoon we had "Dolly" in bed with a temperature of 103 degrees.

Not long ago, I heard that "Dolly" had sold the inn and had gone into the auto accessory business in Hongkong. If so, was he among those killed in the civilian militia of that city. If not, is he among the 5000 captured and who now are interned, according to a news report, somewhere in the Chinese interior "in a small barbed wire inclosure, with no toilet facilities, only one water tap for the 5000 who are being fed but two bowls of rice daily. And was he one of the "dozens, who daily, die like flies?"

And my friends in Manila. How about "Pop" Farrel, manager of Tom's Dixie Kitchen? He, too, was an immaculate dresser and carried a stick. Farrel didn't wear "ducks." He liked black alpaca. When I think of Ferrel, I think of his favorite story.

At one time "Pop" operated a restaurant in Anhalis, near Camp Stotsenburg. While there he "went bond" for a Filipino boy who worked for him. The boy skipped out but for some reason the authorities did not attempt to collect from Ferrel. Twelve years later they found the item on their books, brought suit and obtained judgment against "Pop." The old gentleman thought that was a raw deal. He thought that 12 years should have outlawed the thing. He went to see Gen. Leonard Wood, who was Governor General at the time. He talked of that interview for a long time afterward:

"The general looked at me, and he said: 'Do you play poker, Mr. Farrel?'"

"'Why, yes, general, I like a friendly game, once in a while,' I told him."

"'Well, then,' the general says to me. 'Just consider you've made a losing.'"

What became of "Pop" when Manila was captured. Are Japs eating his "specials" now—baked lapa lapa and chicken a la valinciana?

How about Bob Hertel, owner of the Elite Hotel and the Silver Dollar Bar? Bob never drank his own wares but was continually munching chocolate drops. He was married to a Polynesian "princess." One of the "royalty" of Thursday Island. He, too, had a family of children. He often told me that whenever he had made "enough money" he was going to retire and go to Thursday Island to live. Did he get away to that island paradise before Manila fell? And will he be safe if he is there? Thursday is only a little way from the coast of Australia.

I hate Japs! I always have.

Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

The French Front

THE BOMBARDMENT of the munitions plants in the suburbs of Paris is the kind of thing which should be begun only if the attack is to be pressed home continually and relentlessly by military and political measures. In the Pacific and in the Mediterranean we have learned the perils of a weak and scattered defensive strategy.

LIPPMANN

At Oran and Dakar and in Libya we should have learned the perils of a weak and scattered offensive strategy. For the true offensive is no hit-and-run affair, but a sustained attack at a point where the enemy must fight, yet must fight at a disadvantage.

By this criterion, provided this is the first wave of a sustained and accumulating attack upon the German position in France, the Paris raid is the first move of the western powers which has any promise of achieving positive results. There in France they can open an aerial front where they can act in unison with their most powerful allies—the armies of Soviet Russia. There they can strike in a region where the theater of war is nearer to their own base than to the enemy's. There they can fight from a base, namely the British Isles, where they are at their own maximum strength and in the midst of a dependable people, while the enemy must not only resist them at a distance from his chief source of supply but must also guard himself night and day against sabotage and guerilla attack.

If the German or the Japanese general staff were directing the United Nations war plans, is there any doubt that they would launch their offensive at the nearest and most convenient soft spot, which happens to be occupied France? Is that not exactly what they have always done, beginning with Austria and Manchuria?

IT IS a grievous thing to carry destruction into France. But the notion that occupied France possesses some kind of special right to immunity must be rejected absolutely. If the French were still fighting Germany, as they were in 1917, they would not hesitate any more now than they did then, to bombard any position on French soil that is useful to the enemy. The fact that they have surrendered to Germany, and have let all their territory become an enemy arsenal, an enemy air base, an enemy naval base, and an enemy invasion base, entitles them to no immunity. On the contrary it makes their land a theater of war. It is for the Germans to defend themselves in France as best they can. It is certainly not our duty to render the Germans secure and thus to spare them the trouble of defending what they hold, to feel that because of our abiding and ancient affection for the French nation, we must provide the Germans with a great region from which they may attack us without running the risk of being attacked themselves.

London and Coventry and Liverpool and Plymouth were bombarded from airfields in France. Our ships are being sunk in the Atlantic by submarines that come from French harbors. These airfields and these harbors could not be operated at all if French railroads, French power stations, French factories were not serving them. On what possible ground of morals and justice can anyone presume to complain if, having been attacked, we strike back where the attackers come from? The British have put up with the betrayal at Bordeaux, with the surrender of the undefeated and unscathed French empire overseas, and all the United Nations, reeling under the blows launched from French Indo-China, are living under the perpetual blackmail of Admiral Darlan's navy. There is a limit, and that limit has been well passed when the Ambassador of the so-called French government comes protesting with an air of injured innocence and righteous indignation.

THERE IS no need to debate now whether we were badly advised in 1940 when we recognized the so-called French government at Vichy rather than the Free French. The best that can be said for our decision at that time is that since we were then neutral, pacifist, and unprepared to act, we did the best we could to stay the hand of the pro-Axis French by maintaining some contact inside France with French patriots.

At best a delaying action, this policy was bound in the end to fail. For all the trumps were in Hitler's hand. He had the French prisoners for hostages. He had the French food supply in his control. He had the French economy. He had the Gestapo and the French auxiliary to it. Besides these weapons of coercion and terrorism, he had the bait, so tempting to a demoralized people, of a quicker peace if they helped him to win, and the prospect of France not becoming again a battlefield if the war ended without a fight for the liberation of France. A nation which had surrendered Paris without fighting might thus hope to get back Paris, though on Hitler's terms, without material damage.

BUT IN ADDITION to all that, Hitler and the men of Vichy had as their ace of trumps the love which Britons and Americans, and indeed all civilized men, have for France and for the French people. Exploiting this profound feeling, they have produced the shyster theory that if the French worked against Hitler and he won, they would be punished; but if Hitler lost, the Allies would love France too much to remember the past.

British and American policy has until this week conformed exactly to the promises of this calculated appeal to the basest instincts of a people. Except in the invasion ports which do not affect the issue, the policy of Britain has been to give France immunity, no matter how cruelly and how vitally the policy of the Vichy government hurt them. The policy of the United States, perhaps perforce, has served the same calculation. Jointly we have by our policy been telling the French to fear Hitler and not us. We have been telling them that if they resisted Hitler, they risked much but if they helped Hitler attack us, they risked nothing. Jointly we have been telling the French nation that if they worked for Hitler, they would be safe now, and that in the end we would nevertheless free them.

NOT ONLY have our enemies held all the trumps but besides that the cards have been stacked against us. The British raid on the factories in the suburbs of Paris must mean, if it means anything and is no mere isolated pin prick, that this diplomatic position is now to be redressed by proving that France is the nearest objective of our growing air power, and that, therefore, the French have at least as much to fear from us as they have to gain by assisting our enemies. Whatever forces of resistance there are inside France opposing Darlan are now on notice that the United Nations are not going to suffer another Pearl Harbor, another stab in the back screened by diplomatic negotiation until the blow is perfectly prepared.

If this means the rupture of negotiations about French assistance to the Axis, it is better that we should be striking the first blows, seizing the initiative and holding on to it, before the "collaboration" is fully matured. But conceivably it may not mean the rupture of the negotiations with Vichy since, at long last, we now hold a few trumps of our own. If the British can sustain the attack—and otherwise they should never have made it—and if we will concentrate our effort so as to reinforce the attack, then perhaps a new phase in the negotiations about the French fleet and the French bases may begin. In this phase, the French fleet and the African bases and Madagascar and the French armament factories would be examined in relation to British and American air power over the French cities and the French industries and the French railroads and power stations. With American troops already in Europe, the possibility of collaborating with us rather than with our enemy, and with France's enemy, might also become a consideration to the French who wish to be free.

BUT THOUGH all negotiations fail, the fundamental strategical considerations out-weigh all others.

The greatest advance base of the western powers is in the British Isles. The communications to this base from America are the shortest and the best protected of all our sea communications. For an aerial offensive, most of the equipment can reach the fighting front under its own power, without relying on ships. Occupied France is the nearest objective. It is also the most dangerous salient which the Germans have thrown out into the western world. The aerial attack from Britain upon occupied France is a far less difficult operation than the bombardment of Germany itself. The target is wider. The distance is shorter. The results are likely to be no less profitable in that the attack on the Germans in France rather than in Germany stretches the enemy's communications, contracts our own, and pulls the German defenses still farther away from the Russian front.

Swiss Women

By Marie Widner

Their Defense Duties

AT THE OUTBREAK of the first World War the women of Switzerland decided that the general well-being of the nation's soldiers, on or off duty, was quite as important as first-class military equipment. Under the inspired leadership of Mrs. Else Zublin-Spiller, they consequently began to establish soldiers' sitting rooms in some of the isolated places where men were keeping watch. They scrubbed out abandoned barns and stables, or any shelter that was turned over to them for this purpose by communities or farmers. A stove, some tables and benches, also cheerful curtains and a nook with newspapers, magazines and books, quickly gave these places an aspect of "homes." And "home" was what these men were missing. The women also decided that refreshments for the soldiers should not include alcohol, but that coffee, tea and milk, sandwiches and cake should always be available in a soldiers' sitting room at a minimum price.

In due time over 1500 soldiers' sitting rooms were established throughout the land. Else Zublin-Spiller, the pioneer Swiss "Soldiers' Mother," as she was fondly called by the men, had received the active support of "mothers" for each and every sitting room. When the war was over these fine woman became members of "The Swiss People's Service," managing welfare homes, factory canteens, students' homes, etc., in behalf of federal, municipal and industrial institutions and organizations.

The soldiers' sitting rooms of the 1914-1918 period were never given up entirely in peace time. Switzerland, with a population of 4,200,000, maintains proportionately the largest armed force in Europe, at the largest per capita military expenditure of any country in the world. At the age of 19 or 20 fit citizens have to attend a recruit training school for 116 consecutive days (cavalry 130 days). Afterwards, a man is enrolled into a regular unit and is called for eight repetition courses of 18 days each between the ages of 22-32. From 33-40 he belongs to the First Reserve in which he is liable to a yearly inspection of all his equipment, which Swiss soldiers keep at home, also a repetition course. In the Second Reserve, from 43-48 years of age, he is called to the colors only under special orders.

SWISS SOLDIERS have been drilled in gymnastics from early boyhood on. While they are of army age the men are required to do a certain amount of rifle practice each year under the auspices of a rifle shooting club and according to military regulation. Ski instruction and rigorous winter training have also for many years played a vital part in the Swiss army.

When the second World War came several hundred new sitting rooms, and in given instances, simple new "soldiers' homes" were opened for men who were once more keeping vigil on the border and at important points within the country. No alcohol is served in these places. Swiss women's benevolent societies and private persons have also made available friendly sitting rooms for soldiers off duty, so that wherever a man may be stationed he can find a pleasant nook in a wholesome environment.

Even before the general mobilization in 1939 the Central Bureau for Swiss Soldiers' Welfare got in touch with various women's organizations regarding the establishment of "war laundries." These laundries, founded and maintained by groups of patriotic women, were a much appreciated feature of the first World War. Thinking of their men folk on duty and the many hardships and privations which they have to suffer, the Swiss women reasoned that a human being's health and efficiency depends largely upon cleanliness and comfort. They consequently invited all the men who had no families or means to have this work done for them to send their weekly wash to the nearest war laundry.

THE PRESENT WAR laundries are operated in identical manner by over 1200 women. They cooperate closely with the Central Committee for Soldiers' Welfare of the Federal Military Department. The Swiss field postal service acts as mediator between soldiers and laundries. Upon their arrival bundles are carefully checked and the contents marked. A professional laundry does the actual washing. After two or three days the rough-dry wash is returned and groups of women now attend to the ironing and mending. All articles are conscientiously mended until they are beyond repair. To replace such worn out garments some 30,000 women throughout Switzerland, functioning in groups of 20, have declared themselves responsible for the necessary work. The heads of these units attend to the purchasing of the materials for new shirts and underwear, and of the wool for knitted articles, such as socks, vests, sweaters, abdominal binders, caps to wear under helmets, knee-warmers, gloves, etc. All Swiss schools, from kindergartens up, assist with the knitting, and because it is for the soldiers, many a boy is not ashamed to lend a helping hand. Money for these purchases is provided by the Swiss national fund, to which the entire nation contributes.

The Swiss women have also been building up libraries for the soldiers' sitting rooms. In addition they are actively engaged in welfare work in behalf of soldiers' families in need. Although the Swiss army has been partly demobilized since June, 1940, there are still numerous men on duty. Their places in many a strenuous job, especially on the farms, are cheerfully and efficiently filled by women. Like the men, they consider no sacrifice and effort too great to safeguard the neutrality and liberty of their 650-year-old homeland.

Westernized Filipinos

By Ernie Santos

Monument To American Pioneers

WHILE OTHER Oriental subject peoples have easily become a prey to the Japanese propaganda slogan of "Asia for the Asiatics" resulting in the tragic but not necessarily indefeasible debacles at Singapore, Borneo, Sumatra, Burma, and in other parts of the Netherlands Indies, the Filipino people has remained adamant and immune to the persuasive racial flirtation of the Nipponese and, instead, is more determined than ever to fight alongside the American and the United Nations' cause "to the bitter end."

The fundamental reason for this suicidal, nay almost Quixotic, attitude of the Filipinos is not to be found in their inherent dislike of being subjugated. Their loyalty to the United States is due to factors seldom discussed but nevertheless compelling. First, that Filipinos, of all peoples in the Far East, are most Westernized. Their first contact with the West antedated Japan's by several hundred years when Magellan discovered the islands on March 16, 1521. Second, the altruistic colonial policy pursued by the Government of the United States since that fateful day of December 10, 1898, when it assumed sovereignty over the island archipelago at the Treaty of Paris, has for its leit motif not the enslavement of the natives and not the exploitation of their heritage, but, on the contrary, in the words of President McKinley "to educate them, and uplift and civilize and Christianize them, and by God's grace, do the very best we could by them as our fellow men for whom Christ also died." As regards Christianization, President McKinley greatly erred inasmuch as most Filipinos had been Christians for over three centuries. Just the same his words became the guiding spirit of American colonial policy in the islands—a bungling policy at that, but yet a policy, in the light of recent events, that can never be measured in terms of dollars and cents.

But more than anything else, the Filipinos could not ignore nor forget the valor and the unselfish sacrifices, although unsung and unheard of, of thousands and thousands of Americans from almost every State in the Union—both men and women, soldiers and civilians—who, forsaking the comforts of their homes and the company of their loved ones, gave unstintedly of their time and efforts and their very lives to make the Philippines the country it is today (that is, before its invasion by the Japanese), an island Paradise in the Far East, truly a Pearl of the Orient Seas. Most of these Americans, heroes all of them in the real sense of the word, unluckily died at their hazardous tasks; but some of them, not many, have lived to see the results of their efforts—a magnificent monument to their pioneering spirit that can compare favorably with that of their forebears in the conquest of the West in the early 80's.

THE GROUNDWORK for the present Philippine government was laid out by Americans. Soon after the humiliating defeat of the Spanish fleet by Admiral Dewey and before the signing of the Paris Treaty, President McKinley dispatched a commission to the Philippines "to continue and perfect the work of organizing civil government already commenced by the military authorities, subject in all respects to any laws which Congress may hereafter enact." With Jacob Gould Schurman, president of Cornell University, as chairman, other members of the commission were composed of the following: William H. Taft, of Ohio, later first civil Governor General of the Philippines and President of the United States; Prof. Dean C. Worcester, of Michigan, who later became secretary of the interior in the island government and the man responsible, together with Dr. Paul C. Freer, for the establishment of both the bureau of science and the college of medicine at the State university; the Hon. Luke E. Wright, of Tennessee, who later became chief island executive and who first initiated the movement to improve the Filipinos' health and sanitary conditions; and the Hon. Henry C. Ide, of Vermont, who later succeeded Wright at Malacanang Palace.

It is worth noting that successive administrations, from James F. Smith to Newton W. Gilbert, had made it an invariable cardinal policy to prepare the Filipinos for eventual self-government. This trend, whether for ill or for good, reached its climax when Francis Burton Harrison, of New York, was appointed by President Wilson as the island Governor General. Immediately upon reaching Manila, Harrison thoroughly Filipinized the government from top to bottom.

Philippine jurispudence, both civil and criminal laws which are basically of common and of Spanish origin, has not remained unaffected by American influence. Associate Justices E. Finley Johnson and George A. Malcolm, both for many years members of the Board of Regents (University of the Philippines) "left the greatest imprint upon Philippine law and its administration." In passing, the latter, who is presently occupying a big position in the government of Puerto Rico, is the author of several authoritative and scholarly treatises on Philippine government.

Education of the Filipinos was not neglected. In fact soon after the military occupation of the islands, the Government of the United States conscripted thousands and thousands of American young men and women to teach the Filipinos their ABC's. The Army transport Thomas which left San Francisco on August 23, 1901, carried 545 of them in that trip. For years it has been considered a distinction among the "bamboo Americans" in Manila to be known as one of the Thomasites. The connotation carries with it a recognition in the American community as great as the progenies of those who came on the Mayflower have in the United States. Among the American educators who made Philippine educational system without par in the Orient are: Dr. F. W. Atkinson, Dr. E. B. Bryan, Dr. David P. Barrows, president emeritus of the University of California at Berkeley; Dr. Luther B. Bewley, Dr. Eugene A. Gilmore, former president of the University of Iowa; Walter G. M. Buckisch, Dr. Paul C. Packer, of the University of Iowa, and Dr. Edward C. Elliott, president of Purdue University.

TOGETHER with education, public health service of infinite scale was introduced into the islands. That the Philippines today is one of the healthiest spots in the Orient is due to Dr. Paul C. Freer, Dr. Richard Strong, Dr. Victor G. Heiser, of Johnstown, Pa., and of the "American Odyssey" fame, Maj. Frank S. Bourns, U. S. A.; Col. L. M. Maus, U. S. A., and Maj. George C. Dunham, U. S. A., "who studied public health and welfare work and played an important part in the reorganization of these agencies in 1932 under Governor General Frank Murphy." The Rockfeller Foundation also contributed not a small amount to the Filipinos' greatly improved health scale. Its staff members Dr. William S. Carter, Miss Alice Fitzgerald, Dr. Charles N. Leach, Dr. Paul F. Russell, and Dr. Clark F. Yeager made important contributions not only to the medical education in the Philippines, but also to medical research and public health as well.

DESPITE assertions that Americans make poor colonial administrators, as compared with the British and the Dutch, the record of the following men seem to belie that charge. Arthur W. Ferguson, first secretary of the island executive bureau; Frank W. Carpenter, first goverpor of the Department of Mindanao and Sulu who earned for himself the love and the respect of the recalcitrant Mohammedan Filipinos; Henry L. Stimson, now Secretary of War; Dwight F. Davis, of Missouri, former Secretary of War under Coolidge; Theodore Roosevelt, jr., son of the late and former President of the United States who is now in active duty with the United States armed forces; Gen. Leonard Wood, of the Rough Riders fame and who was Governor General of the islands during the Harding regime; Frank Murphy, former Governor of Michigan, and now Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court; J. Weldon Jones, of Texas, who is now Assistant Director of the United States Budget, and Paul V. McNutt, of Indiana, who is now the Social Security Administrator. The Philippine Civil Service System was brought into fruition by Americans too. Under Dr. W. S. Washburn, Dr. Bolivar L. Falconer, and Harry L. Hershey, the Filipinos became fully indoctrinated with the merit system, instead of the spoils system in government.

WHEN the Japanese pushed their way into Manila both from the north and south of Luzon, they probably made ample use of the wide macadam and asphalted roads built with almost loving care by Cameron W. Forbes, of Boston, and by his successor A. D. Williams, of Culpeper County, Va. In all likelihood their tanks and staff cars are now rumbling along Burnham Green on the Luneta in Manila—a park named after Daniel H. Burnham, a prominent Chicago landscape architect who visited the islands in 1905 and who drew detailed plans for the civic development of Manila and Baguio.

Because of the shortage of wood in the Island Empire, the Philippine forests, rich in tropical variety and tended by Arthur M. Fischer, of Oklahoma, are probably being hewn into logs and shipped to the nearest Japanese ports.

Only a few days ago, the Japanese authorities in Manila made it a crime, punishable by death, for a Filipino to read any printed literature that carries none of their official imprimatur. This strange admonition brought to naught the work done by A. V. H. Hartendorp, publisher and editor of the Philippine Magazine; Carson Taylor, editor and publisher of the Manila Daily Bulletin; Frederick O'Brien, late editor of the Manila Times and author of a famous book on the South Seas, and Sir Wilmott Lewis, formerly of the Manila Times and now the unofficial representative of the British government in Washington.

But in spite of their adversities and their trials, the Filipino people, most particularly those Filipino soldiers now fighting under Gen. Douglas MacArthur on Bataan Peninsula, find a great deal of encouragement in the knowledge that many of the world-famous American soldiers have invariably been veterans of the Philippines, most of them earning their first military laurels on Philippine soil; and that these men whom they befriended will not let them down in the most critical period in their history. To mention a few: Gen. John J. Pershing, Maj. Gen. Jabes G. Harbord, Maj. Gen. Johnson Hagood, Gen. George Marshall, Maj. Gen. Frank McCoy, Gen. Hugh Drum, Maj. Gen. Frank Parker, Gen. Hugh (Ironpants) Johnson, Brig. Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, Lieut. Col. Courtney Whitney.

Last but not least are the thousands of Americans—their roles unknown to the public to be sure—who have directly or indirectly contributed their unsparing and unselfish efforts toward the making of a better Philippines and toward a more rounded and richer Filipino life. Several names taken at random are: Senator Millard E. Tydings, former Senator William King, of Utah; the late Senator Key Pittman, of Nevada; the Hon. Harry B. Hawes, Congressmen Leo Kocialkowski and Samuel Dickstein, George L. Brandt, of the State Department; Irving F. Wixon, of the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization; Ray Hurley, of the Bureau of Census; Richard R. Ely, of the Interior Department, and Prof. Joseph R. Hayden, of the University of Michigan.

When Java Falls

By Marshall Andrews

The Second Phase

WITH THE FALL of Java, the first phase of Japan's part in this war will have been ended and a period of reorganization for the second phase will begin.

Just what that second phase will be, where the blow will strike, what other now peaceful people will become embroiled in the blood and fire of battle can be known for certain only by the Axis high command. Speculation leads to several possibilities, none of them heartening to those whose future is bound up in the cause of the Allies.

Two possibilities may be ruled out at the beginning with reasonable safety. It is not probable that Japan will attack Australia with the intention of investing and adding that continent to her collection of Pacific islands.

IN THE FIRST place, Australia is too vast and land communications are too poor to make the prize worth the cost of taking it. In the second place, Australia lies outside Japan's interior lines of communication; to take the important eastern and southern portions, she would expose herself dangerously, something she has not so far been willing to do. And in the third place, Australia, with the possible exception of Port Darwin, which will be thoroughly and mercilessly bombed as time goes on, does not offer a particularly fine base for Allied operations against Japan behind her island ramparts.

Nor is it probable that Japan will rest on her laurels, sit back and assume the defensive where she now is secure. Axis success in the war depends upon relentless forward movement; once the initiative is surrendered or lost, the war will be lost. Japan must move somewhere from her great bases in the Southwest Pacific and continental Asia. The question is, where?

Since the move probably will not be any farther southward, it must be westward into India, northward into Siberia or northeastward into Alaska. In any of these moves, Japan would retain her interior lines, which are well-protected in all but their northern reaches.

Possession of Java will give Japan control of the Bay of Bengal, will flank Burma and will result in speedily driving Allied resistance out of Burma into India or China, or both. With Calcutta in her hands and possibly Ceylon, Japan's control of the northern Indian Ocean will be complete and Allied lines of communication into the Middle East and the eastern Mediterranean will be dangerously threatened.

SHOULD GERMANY move eastward from Libya now and take and hold Alexandria, the Suez Canal would be closed, the Mediterranean would become an Axis lake in fact, Turkey would be flanked out and the stage would be set for the next and most appalling move in the war.

While Germany drove eastward through Turkey behind the Russian left flank in her expected spring offensive, Japan could attack suddenly and without warning into Siberia and the collapse of Russian resistance likely would come quickly with little chance of aid from her allies. There appears one way to forestall such a monster pincers movement against the only one of the Allies with a formidable continent-based army.

The interior lines of Japan are exposed from the north. Japan itself lies open to air attack from Siberia and, if the way is paved by bombing, for eventual land attack. American bombardment aircraft based on Alaska and the Aleutian Islands, could fly to Japan and some of her bases readily enough; fighters to protect them could be based in Siberia within their radius of operation, pick them up on the way and return to Siberia after the bombings were finished.

PARTLY to prevent an attack of this sort, which must be as obvious to the Japanese as to anyone else, and partly to aid the German effort next spring, Japan could do two things. One, already suggested, would be to attack Russia before Russia permits her allies to use Siberian bases against Japan. The other would be to attack the Aleutians and Alaska.

It is not probable Japan would attack Alaska except for her own protection and to create a diversion in favor of Germany by holding American forces at home which might be used in an Allied offensive in Europe. Should such an attack be launched, and it would include Russian Kamchatka at the same time, it probably would be preceded by an assault on Hawaii.

This Hawaiian attack would serve two purposes. If successful, it would remove the only threat to Japanese communications during an attack on Alaska. And, in any event, it would bemuse and hold American power in the Pacific which might be used in Europe.

Whichever way Japan moves, she is likely to meet with at least temporary success. She holds the interior lines and the initiative and can strike suddenly and with terrific force.

Things are falling into place for real war this spring, war which will make what has gone before seem almost as innocuous as peacetime maneuvers.

The Gallup Poll

East Central States, Ex-Isolationist Center, Vote Total Mobilization by 56% Majority

By Dr. George Gallup

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

Princeton, N. J., March 6.—The East Central States—Illinois, Ohio, Indiana and Michigan—were the center of isolationist sentiment prior to Pearl Harbor; nevertheless, if a plebiscite were held there today on the issue of total mobilization of American men and women for the war effort, it would win by a substantial margin.

This is the indication from an American Institute of Public Opinion survey throughout the East Central States, a survey which is being conducted in all sections of the country as well. Reports already completed for the New England and Middle Atlantic areas have shown substantial majorities there for total mobilization.

Reaction in the East Central area also indicates a readiness to sacrifice for war. Government registration of all able-bodied men and women for war and defense work is favored by 81 per cent in the East Central area. The vote of the area for total mobilization is as follows:

"After finding out what each person can do, should the Government have the power to tell each citizen what to do as his part in the war effort and require him or her to do it?"

EAST CENTRAL STATES
YES	56%
NO	35
UNDECIDED	9

Confining the vote to those with definite opinions, the results would be:

VOTE OF THOSE WITH OPINIONS
YES	62%
NO	38

In the period before America's entrance into the war, Institute polls found that of all sections the East Central section was least in favor of various measures for aid to England. Sentiment there was likewise substantially lower than for the rest of the country on the issue of selective service draft in 1940. Chicago was the center of a number of antiwar movements.

With America's entry into the war, however, opinion in this section of the country on the total mobilization proposal for the prosecution of the war shows only a slight variation from the other sections already reported.

Will other Mid-Western areas, relatively safe from attack because of their geographical position in the middle of the country, vote for total mobilization or vote against it? The next report by the Institute, tomorrow, will show sentiment in the West Central States, and also in the South.

Total Mobilization Results to Date

ON THE TREASURY STEPS, the Modernaires, Marion Hutton and Glen Miller do "Blues in the Night" against a background of admirers

By Scott Hart

To help sell Defense Bonds and so quicken defeat "of those who would make us dance to foreign music," Glenn Miller struck up the band on the Treasury Department steps yesterday, set wild an estimated 2000 hep-to-swing boys and girls and broke up business as usual in the neighborhood.

Men and women came to the overlooking windows for blocks around and didn't leave until the highly amplified, brassy, smoky chuggings of the Chattanooga Choo-choo had been blown away around the eaves of the solemn, gray, austere structure where hundreds inside, with their feet tapping time, were pondering how to sell more bonds.

The public schools, like the big bass drum on the steps, took a terrific beating. The temperature was 49 degrees, but the high-school-age boys snatched open those thigh-length sporty overcoats they wear to give the knees more play. Their eyes left the world with their eyebrows dancing a rhumba. The girls switched their shoulders incredibly. Old men and ladies seemed to be wriggling their toes, decorously.

Rhythm had charge of the air and so, in something like unison, the collective swing-touched heads made a single, affirmative nod when James J. Hayden, dean of the Columbia School of Law, in a one-minute talk, said that "music is a symbol of the joy we have known since 1776." He urged the buying of bonds unless America's dancing be to the squealy Japanese pipes. "We must lend to the limit of our capacity," he said.

Miller brought 17 orchestramen and 6 vocalists to the steps. To let the world know America still has that swing his appearance was gratis. He was said to give $1500 a week out of his own pocket, through his USO broadcast, for the service men. When doing business for himself—not his country—he gets $5000 for an appearance.

MacArthur The Magnificent

By Bob Considine

Copyright International News Service

GEN. MacArthur came back from his European tour near the end of 1931, more determined than ever to win from Congress a modern Army.

But if he had any remaining belief that that would be a simple task, such belief was dispelled on December 21, 1931, when he appeared before the House Appropriations Committee to protest against a 34-million-dollar cut in the War Department's budget. The cut brought the budget figure to $295,250,000.

In the slightly hostile committee room, MacArthur began:

"The War Department realizes acutely the critical conditions which face the Treasury and has cooperated earnestly in the endeavor to lower its expenditures to the minimum compatible with maintaining the fighting efficiency of the Army.

"In doing so, it has sacrificed everything in excess of bare necessities. The problem has been to absorb the decrease imposed by budget limitations with the least disruption in the land forces of our national defense system.

"As you gentlemen can surmise, the preparation of this budget has been attended with the greatest difficulty due to the pressing need for economy in public expenditures. As it stands it represents the minimum on which the military establishment may exist for a single year, rather than the true requirements of national defense."

MacArthur then reminded the committee that the budget item for procurement of airplanes had been cut nearly five million dollars under the figure required to bring the Army up to the minimum of 1800 planes—authorized by the so-called 5-year plan then in vogue. "In other words," he elaborated, "the Army will be 200 planes short of the number which, under law, it should have during the coming year."

His trip to Europe served him well just then. He awakened several of the members of the committee by stating:

"During 1930 the United States spent 6.6 per cent of its total Governmental budget for military activities. During the same year, Great Britain spent 7.9 per cent; Japan, 13.1 per cent; France, 18.4 per cent, and Italy, 25.4 per cent."

The committee probed him on the source of his figures, and indicated, by questioning, that they were not authentic. It suggested, upon dropping that topic, that MacArthur could effect savings by cutting out the pay of Reserve officers during their annual two-week training period, and by lopping off the $4 a month received by National Guardsmen.

"I don't think either of those items should be cut," MacArthur quickly answered. "I believe they go to the very basis of what I tried to bring out earlier: that we should not cut down on trained manpower. I think we have reached the minimum in that respect . . . perhaps we already have gone below the minimum we should have for this country's protection. I don't believe that this continual process of whittling down will be accompanied by anything but national disaster in the future."

A committeeman mentioned the burden of pensions. But MacArthur was prepared:

"I think the enormous sums you are paying now for pensions and other veteran compensation largely are due to lack of proper preparation for the wars we've fought. I think you could have cut those sums down by one-half or even two-thirds if you had had in effect before the World War for a period of ten years the same system of national defense we are now seeking."

Representative Collins interrupted him. "Germany had a very elaborate system, but now is burdened with heavy post-war expenses."

"Germany is paying because she was defeated!" MacArthur said decisively. "I am arguing that we should not have to pay such a terrible bill."

"Well, we're paying in this country, too," Collins put in. "The present depression is just a backwash of the World War."

MacArthur dissented. "I think it is probably due to poor banking after the war as much as to any of the features of the war itself," he said. "I think very much of the embarrassment which faces the world today is due to incidents developed after the war, not during the fighting itself."

BATTLING FOR THE ARMY—Gen. MacArthur shown testifiying before the House Military Affairs Committee in 1935

Harris & Ewing

The committee let it go at that, but quizzed MacArthur sharply on what was behind his rather surprising decision to abandon an earlier plan for an independent mechanized force.

MacArthur detected in the committee's manner a "why don't you make up your mind?" aspect.

"Nobody believes in mechanization more than I do," he answered. "The only change we have made is in not confining it to independent corps. We have incorporated mechanization and motorization into the very warp and woof of every element of the Army, instead of regarding it as something detached, a side issue. It has been woven into the various elements and branches of the service, and it will gradually develop, until its ultimate fruition.

"I think every Army is abandoning the idea of an independent mechanized force," he told the committee. "The reason for the change is because a small independent force could not reach the ultimate development of mechanized possibilities. Mechanization must be made an integral part of each of the branches. For instance, there are certain mechanized elements which should be an ingrained part of the infantry; they should be the bone of every infantry organization. It is the same way with the cavalry and field artillery. It has to be a part and parcel of those elements.

"Segregated as it was, the development was not proceeding satisfactorily."

At that meeting MacArthur praised the performance of the fast Christie tank and announced that he had ordered seven of them—the only modern tanks in the Army at that time.

His mention of the new tank—whose inventor eventually had to sell his tanks abroad—brought the committee hearing back to the topic of money again. Representative Collins pointed out what he termed an inconsistency in MacArthur's opening remarks about the War Department's efforts to bring about a smaller budget.

Then Collins confronted MacArthur with a photostat of Herbert Hoover's statement on the cost of war.

MacArthur held it in his hands a moment.

"Well, what does it say?" a committeeman prodded him.

MacArthur looked at him. "I cannot speak for the President of the United States," he answered.

Collins said, "Well, I'll tell you. It shows 72 per cent of our appropriations go to pay for past wars and provide the sinews for national defense . . ." All of which reminded the committee of MacArthur's plans for the spread of mechanization and mobilization over the entire Army. Collins asked, "Isn't that going to mean additional cost?"

"Probably," MacArthur agreed.

"And it will give each of these branches an opportunity to hold on to what they have, and in addition to that buy additional equipment?"

"No, sir," MacArthur objected. "Not necessarily . . . for instance, we are reducing the horse and mule strength of the Army at the rate of 3000 animals a year."

The cost of the Army school system—military colleges through which officers must pass on the way to more responsible posts—next engaged the attention of the committee that long afternoon. In defense of the school system, MacArthur said:

"I don't think that undue weight is laid upon our school system. In my own particular case, I give full credit to the schools, but I know, too, that they are fundamentally auxiliary to the native ability of the officers; that no school system in the world will ever make a wise man out of a fool.

"I do believe, however, that even the wisest of men can be improved by a proper school training, and certainly in the technique of arms there is no other way I know of by which officers can get the requisite theoretical training in the handling of large bodies of men.

"The rapidity with which an officer develops varies markedly with the background of his training. In times of war men live militarily so rapidly that in the course of 3 or 4 years, beginning at the bottom, they run the full gamut from lieutenant to general officer. But in times of peace, without the molding effect of battle conditions, they mature much more slowly."

Collins cut in, "General, shouldn't we have, instead of our present condition, a nucleus of real, live, vigorous active officers, trained—commensurate with age and rank—for war-time missions in the field?"

"That is the ideal condition, sir."

"We haven't got that now?"

"That is what we aim to have," MacArthur said. "We do the best we can under the law and under the conditions that confront us."

"To repeat, we haven't got that ideal condition now?"

"I wouldn't say that," MacArthur answered. "I will say very frankly that I have always been astonished at how much better the men under me do things than I expected them to do. I wouldn't hesitate a minute to take our present officer personnel and use these men under battlefield emergencies with every assurance that the Nation could count upon them as thoroughly as any force I have known. I would not say that there would not be a certain percentage who would fail, because a certain percentage of any group of men fail under such conditions."

However, despite his earnestness and the picture of unpreparedness he painted at his first complete grilling at the hands of the appropriation chiefs, the House soon cut even the originally cut budget, in order to force a reduction in regular Army officers from 12,000 to 10,000.

Sorely disappointed, MacArthur, on May 9, 1932, wrote this letter to Representative Bertrand H. Snell:

"In the hearings held by the Military Subcommittee on Appropriations, no indication was given that a reduction of 2000 officers was contemplated. In consequence, no opportunity has been afforded to express the opinion of the War Department on such a revolutionary step. As the military adviser of the Government I am, therefore, taking the liberty of presenting to you the views of the general staff on this important matter, with the hope that you will lay them before the House.

"Skilled officers, like all other professional men, are products of continuous and laborious study, training and experience. There is no short cut to the peculiar type of knowledge and ability they must possess. Trained officers constitute the most vitally essential element in modern war, and the only one that under no circumstances can be improvised or extemporized.

"An army can live on short rations, it can be insufficiently clothed and housed, it can even be poorly armed and equipped, but in action it is doomed to destruction without the trained and adequate leadership of officers. An efficient and sufficient corps of officers means the difference between victory and defeat.

"It is for these reasons and because of the further fact that the success of the American system of (non-conscription) preparedness is peculiarly dependent upon the continued existence of an adequate corps of professional officers, that the War Department views with the utmost concern the proposal in the Army appropriations bill to reduce permanently by more than 16 per cent the number of officers.

"Prior to 1920 there existed in the world only two general systems under which military forces were organized and maintained. The basis of one was the conscript; of the other, the professional soldier. The former afforded the maximum of defense with the minimum of cost, but prescribed as a civic duty service with the colors. The latter depended exclusively upon the enrollment of those who adopted the military as a professional career. It entailed abnormal costs, due to the necessity of reimbursing along professional lines the personnel involved. For this reason no nation has been able in modern times to maintain a professional Army of sufficient size to insure complete protection.

"The principal element of the American system is twofold. The first is a small professional force to act as a training cadre—a covering force in case of need, and a framework upon which mobilization of our full force could be effected. The second essential element is a partially developed organization of citizen soldiers divided into a National Guard and various classifications of reserve and other groupments, backed by a continuous program of limited military training for these elements in time of peace.

"Our small Regular Army would be impotent, through its own unaided efforts, to defend this Nation against powerful and sustained attack. Likewise, an unorganized and untrained population would be tragically helpless in the face of highly organized and trained units. The two parts of the system thus articulate with and complement each other to insure that America's enormous latent strength would not be dissipated through hostile action before it could be harnessed into a powerful military machine.

"The Regular Army is the bulwark and basis of the whole structure. It is the instructor, the model and, in emergency, the leader of the whole. The only continuing body in which resides the professional knowledge and technical skill capable of accumulating, organizing, training, and leading to victory a national army of citizen soldiers is the professional officer corps. Constantly they concern themselves with the mobilization plans for personnel and materiel necessary in a great emergency, and make every practicable prearrangement for the successful operation of these plans should need arise.

"Commissioned personnel of the citizen components supplement the corps of regulars, they give generously and patriotically of their time and efforts in peace so that, as the numerically preponderant mass of the officers in an emergency army they may function promptly and effectively. But their devotion and their efforts in this preparation would be wasted without the efficient guidance of their mentor—the Regular Army officer. Through schools, study, research, and practical training, the regulars devote their lives to keeping abreast of the times in complicated and rapidly changing arts and sciences, and within the limits imposed by available opportunity impart the results to the officers of the citizen components.

"So I repeat that in the last analysis our whole defensive system rests upon the efficient performance of a corps of regular officers. In the interest of economy the strength of the professional force was fixed at the minimum considered by Congress in 1920 to be consistent with safety—namely 18,000 officers and 285,000 enlisted men. Yet during the past decade this strength has been progressively decreased until today it stands at approximately 12,000 officers and 125,000 men.

"With a vivid realization of the need for rigid economy in public expenditures, the next War Department budget sacrifices everything in excess of bare necessities. But the department insists that any retrenchment which destroys or seriously damages a vital element of our already weakened defensive structure is not economy but extravagance of the most expensive kind.

"The War Department has frequently reported to Congress that the minimum peace strength of the Regular Army at which it can carry out the missions assigned by the National Defense Act, and make a reasonable preparation for a complete and immediate mobilization in the event a national emergency is declared by Congress, is 14,063 officers and 165,000 enlisted men. The expedients to which the War Department is necessarily put in order that the missions of the Regular Army may be even approached, with the reduced officers and enlisted men, can be appreciated only by those who have to carry this grave responsibility.

"It appears superfluous to point out again that the United States has achieved a relative degree of land disarmament unique among the great powers of the earth. By no improvisation could our system be adapted suddenly to offensive purposes, because it deliberately contemplates a delay of several months between the declaration of emergency and the time when any considerable forces could take the field.

"Among the armies of the world, the American ranks sixteenth in strength, although this Nation ranks fourth in population and first in wealth. Further reductions would bring us to prostration—a condition not conducive to the promotion of a feeling of security at home nor to enhancing the respect with which our pacific counsels are received abroad.

"Very sincerely,

"DOUGLAS MACARTHUR, GENERAL, C. OF S."

MacArthur's plea was ignored. Instead of being hailed as a prophet of extraordinary perception, he was either ignored or taken with more than a grain of salt. His unusual use of words aroused amusement; amusement that they should come from a representative of a profession that was not considered quite bright, or very articulate.

He went back to his overwhelming job of saving a sick, flabby Army. He was busy with that job when his Commander in Chief, Herbert Hoover, made him perhaps the most unpopular military man the United States Army ever had, by ordering him to throw the ragged bonus army out of Washington.

(Tomorrow: "The Hero of the Bonus Army.")

'Mumph' Girl, Bogeyman of Teen-agers

Wan, Listless Type Is Thus Designated By Young Actress

By Ida Jean Kain

GATHER around, all you teen-age girls who think you are too old to get enough sleep or to play out of doors. I want to tell you about a new term. It is "mumph" girl and it is what you might turn into. It connotes a wan, listless, uninterested and uninteresting expression and a general lack of vitality. It has nothing whatever in common with "oomph."

The coiner of this antonym for "oomph" is Joan Newton, who has plenty of the desirable quality. Joan is one of the leading players in "Junior Miss." She has already discovered that it pays a woman to look younger than she is—she is 20 and appears 16—and that sleep, sun and air are the finest beauty formula ever invented.

Actresses Maligned

What about the rumors that actresses spend their days in bed and their nights brightening up cafe society? "I hate night clubs," replies Jean casually. "They are filled with celebrities trying to get a peek at each other, and smoke. Smoke is all right if you smoke. I don't—and it hurts my eyes."

So, just pausing long enough after the show for a light snack and five minutes' calisthenics, which she does at night because she feels so energetic, Joan pops into bed and comes close to sleeping the clock around. She can get by with 11 hours, however.

When she gets up, she is wide awake and she wants to get out of doors as quickly as possible to roller skate, "which is much more dangerous than ice skating, the Central Park hills being what they are;" or, when melting snow ruins the park, she will ice skate. She likes to ski and thinks anyone can learn and that it is loads of fun. "I don't mind falling or looking silly, so I enjoy it even when I'm not doing so well," she says. "Nobody can enjoy a game when worried about appearing ridiculous, or when scared." In summer, she likes to swim and play tennis.

Leads Active Life

The thing is, she l-o-v-e-s to exercise! She plays at some sport every day of the week. And what a figure she has! Bust, 33½ inches; waist, 22 inches; hips, 32½ inches. She is 5 feet 5 and weighs between 108 and 110 pounds. I asked whether she ever has to worry about keeping her weight up or down and she said promptly, "Yes, down! I like to eat—I eat all the time! Well, anyway, she doesn't diet! And she does eat the things al girls who hope to grow up to be beautiful should eat: Lots of salads, vegetables, lean meats, eggs. She does not like milk, so makes up for that with ice cream sodas. Unless you are as active as Joan, I couldn't advise the same course for you—not unless you want to gain weight.

Where do you suppose this corn-fed outdoor girl was born? Right in the middle of Manhattan.

This 20-year-old girl, Joan Newton, one of the leading juvenile stars in "Junior Miss," manages to look 16 by daily exercise and plenty of sleep. Joan eats anything she wants, but everyday she plays tennis, swims or indulges in some sport. Here she is wearing a cunning tenager hat. It is a youthful poke bonnet in navy blue straw with bow and veil trimming

New Uniforms For Army Nurses

New work uniforms and new gray leather gloves have been authorized for members of the Army Nurse Corps, the War Department has announced.

The new uniform, designed by the Army Quartermaster Corps, will be of white bleached poplin for indoor duty and in light blue seersucker or crepe for off-duty wear.

The skirt will have two patch pockets, and there will be a shoulder loop for wearing insignia of grade. There will be a row of buttons down the front of the waist to a belt that is attached by two loops at the side seams. The back of the dress incorporates the yoke with gatherings above and below the waistline.

Attire for Africa

QUERY: I shall soon be leaving for the northern part of Africa on defense business. Since I am a nurse, I will be told what to wear during the day. If there is any social life, what kind of clothes would you suggest? Would silk hose deteriorate in that climate? Should I include a long dress? I shall be gone for two years and would also like to know if there is any way of preserving a supply of cosmetics, such as creams.

ANSWER: Even when off duty you will probably wear the nurse's dress" uniform, according to Mrs. Laura Waters, who for the last 15 years has been making trips to Europe and about (before war broke out). Mrs. Waters served overseas during the last World War in nurse's aid and in home service work with the boys.

Unless conditions are very different during this war than they were throughout World War I, this travel expert believes the dress uniform will be worn on the street as well as for occasional parties in Africa. "In the last war women were expected to wear their uniforms. It was considered unpatriotic to be seen without them," Mrs. Waters explained. (At times the uniform is a protection as well as a distinction.)

On duty, the white nurse's uniform will be worn as prescribed. The dress uniform, consisting of navy blue skirt, jacket and cape and extra tailored coat, can be dressed up on occasions by the addition of a more frilly white blouse, rather than the regulation tailored one. Conspicuous dress is not advised, however, because it is not liked by the natives, as Mrs. Waters pointed out.

As extras, washable dresses should be included. Since northern Africa is hot even in the winter time, light, colored cottons are suggested for summer and dark sheers for winter. Functional, rather than fussy, clothes are advised. Two or three pairs of low-heeled shoes, along with regulation work shoes, one semi-dress pair and one pair of evening slippers, if desired, should be included. The latter are optional if a long dress (which is seldom needed) is not included.

A plentiful supply of rayon or rayon and cotton underwear (simply tailored and easily launderable, like the dresses) is advisable. Cotton undies and slips, especially, take up perspiration and react favorably to soap and water without the necessity of ironing.

As for cosmetics, a six weeks' supply is enough. In French Africa, imports from Paris are on hand. In other parts imports are still coming from England. While favorite American brands will not be available, others will substitute. As Mrs. Waters says, "In six months you will get used to the food, coffee and clothes. Modern African cities are far from being primitive. I have always been impressed in my travels by the ease with which a person can adjust oneself in another country."

Military Wedding

QUERY: I am engaged to a captain in the Army and am to have a church wedding in June. According to military rule my fiance must wear his uniform at all times. Since the summer uniform consists of a cotton shirt and trousers, would this attire look proper at a formal wedding—or is there a formal summer uniform? Would white suits be fitting for the best man and ushers?

ANSWER: Officers in the Army wear "summer whites" for their formal summer uniforms, which are distinct from their field uniforms. This uniform would be worn for a formal wedding. It would be permissible for the ushers and best man to wear white suits if none of them are in the service. Otherwise they, too, will wear the white uniform.

Wedding Announcement

QUERY: At four years of age, after my father's passing, I made my home in another city with my uncle. In this case, who should make the wedding announcement? Could my aunt and mother together make the announcement? If so, how? I think as much of my aunt as I do my mother and I do not wish to hurt anyone's feelings.

ANSWER: By all means, according to proper authorities, your mother is supposed to announce your wedding. If your aunt were consulted about the matter, she would probably be very agreeable to the procedure.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Self-Educated Man, 35, Who Can't Win Acceptance By Any Social Group, Almost Cries of Loneliness At Times, Having None to Talk With, No Companions

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I have reached what seems to be a dilemma. I have educated myself,—by reading and attending lectures and discussion groups,—to the apparent point where I am out of place with my original circle and yet lack the means to enter the circle I aspire to join. For example, I was born and reared in the Lutheran faith, and at one time taught in a Lutheran Sunday school. Now, I belong to the Unitarian Church; but socially, I am an outsider to the small congregation.

The few invitations and social opportunities that I have received from my fellow workers (at the postoffice where I am employed) are never repeated after one visit, I regret to say. I don't drink beer or play cards. My mother saw to that years ago. And I just don't fit in with their ideas and line of conversation,—with one exception. A young Jewish chap asked me over to his house to hear his new album of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony with the choral,—and we talked about our favorite composers.

A few words with people here and there,—at the theater, on the street, at work,—have given me courage to keep my head above water. But some nights, when I see so many persons my own age together in pairs and groups,—at the symphony, opera, ballet or theater,—and I have no one to turn to for a little talk or a bit of companionship, I nearly cry from loneliness. I have even tried to go back and submerge myself in the ways of my old group; but they, sensing the chasm that stands between, have repulsed me.

And so I have gradually learned that I am a man without a class. When I was in my early twenties and my acquaintances had not yet made permanent "tie-ups," I did not feel this. The difference was not then so marked. But now, at 35, I feel that I have reached a "dead end," socially; and that the old saying, "a little learning is a dangerous thing," aptly applies to me.

For the past 15 years, I have been obliged to support my mother. This I have been glad to do, but the responsibility has cost me the chance to better myself in many ways. With my mother's help, I put my brother through college. Nothing was left for making contacts. Then, it seemed the only thing to do. But now I feel the price of the sacrifice. Possibly you know the antidote. At present, I don't. Sincerely, R. W. C.

Problem Dates Back To Early Experiences

DEAR R. W. C.: The fact that you are more learned than one circle of acquaintances and less cultivated than another, does not explain your lost and lonely status. But your forlorn hope,—now destroyed, to your despair,—that a degree of book knowledge would "put you across" with certain people, tells a story. It tells the story of a man who,—for reasons that remain to be explored,—has been a social misfit, a Banquo-at-the-feast of human fellowship, since his earliest memory; or, at least, since his first conscious (and unsuccessful) efforts to be accepted as "one of the boys."

The story goes this way, on the surface: Gradually you had recourse to books, and "cultural" pursuits, and "good works," as the only available substitutes for those friendships you craved and could not achieve. Then you seized on the theory that it was your "high brow" difference from the "low brow" persons with whom you associated, that formed the insuperable barrier between. You proceeded to put this theory to the test, by snatching at opportunities to sell yourself to a "better class," — an essentially more literate and urbane type of person. Only to find that you were as much,—or more,—of a "flop" with them as you had been with the rowdy group. Since when have you been falling rapidly into total despair,—because you haven't the faintest idea (in your conscious mind) what it is that makes you "poison" to people.

And, I must tell you frankly, neither have I—at this distance. That is to say, with no more to go on than you have told here, I cannot "put the finger" on the specific offense you give, nor its subjective source. But I do know positively that you are afflicted with grievous personality handicaps, that have their origin in your childhood experience. Deep down you don't like yourself, and you are afraid of people—"scared almost to death of them" may not be too strong a phrase. When you are trying hardest to "put yourself over" you are most fearful of being rejected. In consequence, though outwardly you may seem controled, inwardly you are in a shivering, perspiring emotional state that unconsciously communicates itself to the object of your address, thus causing him to recoil from a quality of being he cannot define, but which he seeks to escape—because it makes him feel wretchedly uncomfortable, too.

You see, therefore, that your problem of heartbreaking loneliness—a problem that has grown worse with the years,—cannot be eased by "antidotes," which the dictionary defines as "whatever tends to counteract evil that something else might produce." You have got to treat the cause of that loneliness, if you hope to cure it. And the cause lies hidden in your early experiences,—either in early failures to "get on" with people, or in shameful memories that have powerfully inhibited you in relation to others ever since.

You must have trained analytic assistance in getting the "saving slant" on yourself that will lead, eventually, to psychically healthy new ways of feeling, thinking and behaving—all of which is necessary if you are to become the "man among men" that you properly wish to be. (And assuredly can be, if you will submit, for a time, to expert guidanc.) Since you live in Baltimore, I suggest you bring your problem to the attention of either Dr. J. Whitman Newell, head of the Maryland Mental Hygiene Society, or Dr. George Preston, the brilliant commissioner of mental hygiene for the State. Either of these men will point you the way to that social acceptance you have so long sought in vain, down "deadend" roads. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

LAST-MINUTE questions about your income tax can be costly, so don't wait until March 16 to learn about the new rules.

This year you may use the new simplified tax form (for those whose incomes aren't over $3000) or the regular form. But before using either be sure of your tax status. These questions and answers may help.

Q. I am single and maintain a home for a dependent mother; do I have "Head of Family Exemption" and also $400 credit for my dependent?

A. This year, you receive "Head of Family" ($1500) exemption only. For an additional dependent you'd get $400 credit.

Q. My son is over 18, but still goes to school; is he a dependent?

A. No, you are only credited $400 for each minor child; older children aren't credited unless incapable of self-support.

Q. My income is partly from investments; do I take earned income credit?

A. Yes, if net income is $3000 or less, your credit is 10 per cent of it. Net income is arrived at by subtracting your deductions from your gross income.

Record Cabinet Performs Double Duty

By Martha Ellyn
The Post Household Editor

Do you have a record collection and no place to keep the records? Since most persons who listen to symphonic music are usually surrounded by magazines and books as well as records, a designer has created for their benefit the handsome pine-finished mahogany record cabinet and magazine stand shown above. The left and right cupboards will hold 10 by 12 inch record books; the lower open shelf will take 12-inch albums also.

The upper shelf in the center is slanted so that you may keep your current magazines where you can get at them easily. This cabinet has a leather top and base. The handles are woven of the same leather as used for the top. With the exception of four hinges, no metal is used in the manufacture of this piece of furniture, so this is a patriotic gesture to defense savings.

One virtue of this cabinet is that it can be placed next to a divan as well as to the wall. It is 56 inches in length, 29 inches in height, and 15 inches in dept. The console top makes an admirable place for flowers and pairs of vases, lamps or other interesting objects of art.

Keeping Home Pleasant, Best Contribution Toward Defense

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin

With juvenile delinquency up 50 per cent in England since the war started, educators in America have been striving to use the English experience to avert a similar rise in juvenile delinquency here. The consensus of opinion among leaders is that the home life of the nation must be kept as normal as possible and that mothers of growing families must not become involved in war industries that will take them away from their homes. That American women recognize the home front as the first line of defense for America's children is evidenced by the mail that comes from women in their homes who ask for help in doing their job cheerfully, economically.

A Boys' Room

Mrs. L. E. writes: "I want to change my guest room into a room for my two little sons, one aged five and a half. I have to use twin beds of Jenny Lind style in walnut, a baby crib, a baby chest of drawers in cream color, a lift lid chest and a draped dressing table. How can I make over the dressing table for use in a boy's room? The room has cream walls and I have new chenille bedspreads in dusty rose, really almost a wine color. The rugs are light-colored scatters. The curtains are a heavy fabric striped in wine and dark blue. I have some material left of this striped pattern . . . could this be used with fringe for the tops of the chest, dressing table, etc.? I have to keep curtains and spreads, but I could have the dressing table built over if you suggest."

The Answer

I doubt if it would pay you to try to make over the dressing table . . . it seems to me that it would be better to try to make use of this in one of the other rooms. It could of course be adapted for a desk for the other child, or it could be used to hold your scales for the baby, but I shouldn't advise making any real investment in changing it. Otherwise I should think that the room will do nicely for the two boys. Later you may want to add a broad work table perhaps and maybe a pair of walnut chests. The striped material would be quite all right for the tops of the chests.

Hang Card Table On Closet Wall

A card table is a very necessary article. But one does get a little tired of the table sliding and falling over on the closet floor, cluttering up the closet, if not tearing down the clothes as it falls.

But you can hang up your card table in a saddle bag made of heavy denim. This bag is really two large pockets which fit around the corners of the table, and straps are attached for hanging it from a hook. Some of the more expensive bags have pockets for table covers, cards, etc.

Egg Recipes

LENT is a fine time to try new combinations of foods. Eggs take on new allure if poached, mixed with crabmeat and sprinkled with cheese. Of course the eggs should be given attention in the way they are presented as well as the way in which they are cooked. Try the following presentation and no doubt you will be sent scurrying back to the kitchen to prepare seconds:

Poached Eggs, Crabmeat and Cheese—Drain, then pick over the contents of a 6½-ounce can of crabmeat. Melt 1½ tablespoons butter and add 1½ tablespoons flour. When these ingredients are bubbling stir in slowly ¾-cup milk. Add and heat the crabmeat. Season with salt and pepper. Remove from fire. Add 1 tablespoon sherry, and place where it will keep hot. Prepare six large rounds of toast, butter. On each toast round place a poached egg. Heap the crabmeat on the eggs. Sprinkle with grated cheese. If desired they may be run under a broiler to permit the cheese to melt. Top with a sprig of parsley.

Eggs in black butter may seem a dreary dish, but try them and you will decide they are eggs with a punch. The following directions are for individual serving:

Eggs in Black Butter—Melt in a small skillet 1 tablespoon butter. Add and saute slowly until firm two eggs, season them lightly with salt. Place on hot platter. Sprinkle with four chopped ripe olives. Add to the skillet, two tablespoons butter. Cook until golden brown. Add two teaspoons mild vinegar. Pour this mixture over the eggs. Garnish with chopped parsley.

Scorch Warning

Preserves, while cooking, should be stirred frequently to prevent scorching. Be careful not to overcook them as then an undesirable flavor would result and the color would not be attractive.

Chinese Envoy Honored At Culbertson Reception

By Carolyn Bell

Taking time out from his perpetual lecture tour, Dr. Hu Shih (who admits he recently made 17 lectures in 8 days) paused just long enough to be honor guest at a gala reception yesterday afternoon given by Mr. and Mrs. William S. Culbertson. And this fete, honoring the Chinese Ambassador, winds up a series of three receptions given by the former diplomat and Mrs. Culbertson.

Gleefully running away with part of the spotlight yesterday afternoon was the host's baby granddaughter, Mary Louise, who came down from New York with her mother, Mrs. Thomas Luckenbill. The former Junia Culbertson was lovely in an aqua dinner gown encircled about the waist in Chinese red.

Bright red tulips were placed in low bowls under the many rare oil paintings that decorate the walls of the Culbertsons' apartment at 2101 Connecticut Avenue. Standing in a more or less informal receiving line were Mrs. Culbertson, in robin's egg blue, and the smiling Ambassador. Not far away was Mr. Culbertson who greeted the guests in line or wandered about as his fancy dictated.

While their former parties have featured residentials or officials yesterday's fete definitely had a diplomatic accent. Many of the Chinese diplomats were accompanied by their wives, prettily turned out in native dress. Mme. Chu, whose husband is Military Attache of the embassy, was among those pouring tea. Mme. Martins, wife of the Brazilian Ambassador, dropped in on the party for a short while.

Justice Jackson Among Guests

"My dear I rode down on the bus"—exclaimed an expensively clad matron who vows she can manage to get places without the help of her car. Miss Pauletta Guffey chatted over the tire situation with Mrs. Robert H. Jackson, who assisted at the tea table. Associate Justice Jackson stopped in for a short while to pick up his wife and take her off to their McLean, Virginia home.

Others pouring at the tea table, which was centered with snapdragons, were Mrs. Walter George, Mrs. Charles McNary, who accented her black ensemble with a gay fur hat; Mrs. Henry Alvah Strong, Mrs. Ernest Draper and Mrs. Emil Hurja. Jane Culbertson, who effected bangs yesterday, wore a cherry red frock trimmed in sequins. She moved in and out of the crowded rooms seeing that guests found the tea or ice cream in the dining room and the bar in the library.

"I haven't been home since morning," laughed Mme. Fotitch "and to top it all off someone sat on my hat during first aid course," she continued. But despite such a harrowing experience the wife of the Yugoslav Minister looked like she had just stepped out of a band box. In a particularly striking hat was Mme. Picot, who accompanied her husband, the Minister Counselor of the French Embassy. A full snood of filmy black lace flared out from several braided bands of satin. Another striking hat was that worn by Mrs. Stanley Hornbeck. Fashioned of black faille it swooped up on one side—and she proudly displayed a pocketbook to match.

Mme. Hurban, Mme. Sze Attend

Mme. Hurban, wife of the Czech Minister, reported that her husband is in New York for several days—yes, making a speech. Mme. Sze, wife of the former Chinese Ambassador to Washington, attended the party as did her son and his trim wife, Mme. Deson-Sze. Mme. Yu, wife of the Attache of the Chinese Embassy, wore a lovely gown of royal blue brocade. Representative Katherine Byron was there as were Mr. and Mrs. Bill Murphy, Mrs. Patrick Hurley, Miss Carolyn Nash, Mrs. Carlton Holdrege, who was accompanied by Mrs. Stirling Lacy, Miss Anne Squire, George Boncesco, Mrs. Thomas Burke, Miss Henrietta Sherwood and dozens of others.

Miss Bishopp Is Wed to Mr. Bentley

Spring flowers in pale pastel colors decorated the Piney Branch Road home of Dr. and Mrs. Fred C. Bishopp last night for the marriage of their daughter, Miss Hazel Eulalie Bishopp, to Jordan Ruthven Bentley, jr., son of J. R. Bentley, of Washington.

The Rev. Edward H. Pruden read the vows at 9 o'clock in the presence of a few close friends and relatives. Justin Lawrie, a friend of the bridegroom's family, sang.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, was attired in a mist blue suit with hat of the same shade and luggage accessories. Her matron of honor was Mrs. Charles Whitney Shauck, who wore a toast brown ensemble.

Charles Dawson was best man for Mr. Bentley. A reception at the home followed the ceremony, and Mrs. Bishopp received the guests wearing a gown of gray with jacket in American Beauty shade.

The bride attended the University of Maryland, Stetson University and University of Miami. She has taken a number of tennis awards and is well known as an athlete. Mr. and Mrs. Bentley will live in Baltimore, Md.

Miss Ann Mitchell Here for Visit With Miss Corbin

Miss Ann Mitchell, daughter of Mrs. J. T. H. Mitchell, of New York and Greenwich, Conn., has arrived in Washington to spend a few days as guest of Miss Dolly Corbin. The latter recently visited the Mitchells in Palm Beach, Fla., and Miss Ann Mitchell returned to the Capital with her.

Having been in Washington frequently, Miss Mitchell has a host of friends here and always enjoys a whirl of parties during her brief stays here. From the Capital she will go to New York early next week and then will return to her mother's home in Palm Beach later in the season. Later, she hopes to return to Washington with her mother for an extended visit.

Washington Girls Attend Yale Prom

The Yale Junior Prom, which took place last evening at the Payne Whitney gymnasium, brought to New Haven some 1500 of the young social cream of the country.

In keeping with the wartime emergency the prom dispensed with elaborate and gala decorations and entertainment. Simplicity has been selected as the motif of the season.

Among the Washington girls and their escorts who attended the prom were Miss Barbara Beale with Richard Williams, of Alexandria; Miss Phyllis Johnson with David T. Harris, of Rehoboth Beach, Del.; Miss Bette Brady with George B. Pettengill, of Waban, Mass.; Miss Kathleen O'Hearn, of Chevy Chase with James J. Keating, of Scarsdale, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. Oscar F. Douglas, of Washington; Miss Mary F. Hopkins with John B. Heald, of Morristown, N. J., and Mis Alice Johnson with William R. Coles, of Upper Darby, Pa.

Chapmans Feted At Dinner

Mr. and Mrs. Frank A. Waring entertained at an informal dinner last night in honor of the Assistant Secretary of the Interior and Mrs. Oscar Chapman in their apartment on Twentieth Street.

Among those on hand to bid a momentary farewell to Mr. Chapman, who will leave this weekend for a visit in Denver, Colo., were the Phillipine Commissioner, Joaquin Elizalde; Mrs. James L. Green, and Col. Robert Garforth.

The other two in the painting are her sisters, Miss Mary Thersa and Miss Marion Norris, and all of them are daughters of Dr. and Mrs. Leo Brison Norris. Miss Norris is home from the Finch School in New York for the weekend and to attend the wedding of Miss Jean Fairweather Waggaman, (former Finch student) and Francis Albert Harper. Miss Norris will return to New York tomorrow

Mrs. McNutt Plans Way To Save Tires—and Time

When Mrs. Paul V. McNutt arrived at a party a few days ago and saw five women there, all from the Shoreham Hotel, where she lives, and each of whom had come in her own car, she made a resolution. Briefly, it's this: The next time she's going to a big party, she plans to call the hostess; ask who's invited from the Shoreham, and then take several others along with her.

Thus, tires will be saved; and also the time of several chauffeurs—to say nothing of the wear and tear on cars. Seems a sensible thing to do, in this wartime era of hurry and bustle, when tires are wearing thinner by the hour, and nobody knows when, or if, it will be possible to buy new ones.

So agreed the handful of guests at Mrs. McNutt's small luncheon yesterday, just after their hostess had finished averring "If five women from the same place are going to the same party, there's no reason why they shouldn't go together."

The luncheon itself was one of those pleasantly informal fetes, given just for fun and for instance, and including nine guests. Mrs. Conger Pratt, first guest to arrive, was also the first to leave, as she had to get to a Red Cross class by 2:30 o'clock.

Mrs. Thurman Arnold arrived with her sister, Mrs. Royal Hauer, of New York, who has been here for several days; will return home this weekend, but hopes to be back for a longer visit in April.

Mrs. Edwin Watson mentioned that much of her time recently has been taken up with committee meetings in connection with the forthcoming Boston Symphony performance here for Russian relief.

"I've been in court all morning," Mrs. Clarence Norton Goodwin told Mrs. Bulkley Griffin, and then proceeded to explain she was there to help a servant who had been arrested, and that the experience for her was something so new and strange she didn't know when she would recover. Mrs. J. Fred Essary and Mrs. Charles Clement Cresson were others at the luncheon. Mrs. Cresson, incidentally, is widely known as Mary Jordan, former opera contralto, who has sung at the White House, and was prominently identified with a movement to make Manila opera-conscious some years ago when her husband, an Army officer, was stationed there.

Returning Today

The Minister of the Netherlands and Mme. Loudon and George Abell will return from Pittsburgh this morning, where they have been for the past three days. The Minister spoke there before a large gathering yesterday.

Austrian Baron, Miss Riebler Are Married

In a quiet ceremony at the National Cathedral yesterday, Miss Helene Teresa Riebler became the bride of Baron George von Roseberg de la Marre, formerly of Austria, now of Washington. The Rev. ZeBarney Phillips officiated at the 3:30 o'clock ceremony in the Chapel of Joseph of Arimathea.

The bride, who is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Riebler, of Spitcal, a city near Vienna, arrived in this country last fall after taking the Navemoir from Seville, Spain. The Navemoir is the ship that sailed from port to port for over two months until it was finally permitted to dock in this country. The bride, who met her husband in Austria about six years ago, has been visiting his aunt, Miss Alice Delano, in her home near East Hardwicke, Vt., and more recently has been the house guest in Washington of Mr. and Mrs. Boyd Carpenter.

The baron is the son of Baroness Rosenberg Drier, who is now making her home here at Hotel 2400, and the late Baron von Rosenberg, of Austria.

The bride was given in marriage yesterday by Representative Charles A. Plumley, of Vermont.

After a brief honeymoon, the couple will make their home in the baron's apartment on Twenty-second Street. They have both taken out their first papers for American citizenship.

Hallett Johnsons To Give Dinner For Visitor

Tonight's dinner will mark the middle of a busy social weekend for Mr. and Mrs. Hallett Johnson and their daughter, Miss Katherine Johnson. This evening's fete will honor Miss Margaret Seward who arrived in town late this week for a visit with her brother-in-law in the State Department and her sister.

Before her return to New York Monday, she will be the guest of the hour at another party, a cocktail fete, tomorrow at the Johnson's R Street home.

Last night, however, it was the daughter of the family, Miss Katherine Johnson, who gathered a bit of company around the Johnson table. Afterward the party journeyed to the Friday Evening Supper Club party.

Miss Johnson's guests were Miss Mildred Dunn, Miss Elaine Darlington, Miss Ann Wilkinson, Miss Jean Merrill, Miss Anne Sperry, Miss Laura May Norris, Rosencranz Baldwin, Robert Parsons, Tom Hamilton, Oliver Perry, Marvin Coles, Lieut. Peter Gifford, Albert Mann, and Edward Svenson.

Dorothy Muriel Donovan Is Bride of Lieut. Brown

At a candlelight ceremony last evening in the Sixth Presbyterian Church Miss Dorothy Muriel Donovan, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward L. Donovan, became the bride of Lieut. Robert Ballou Brown, U. S. A., son of Mrs. Earl A. Brown and the late Mr. Brown. The Rev. J. Herbert Garner officiated at the 8 o'clock ceremony, and Portia Kehlert sang the "Ave Marie."

Given in marriage by her father, the bride was gowned in white satin, fashioned with long, puffed sleeves, a simple bodice with a high waist in front, short train, full skirt and sweetheart neckline. Her veil, which extended into a long train, was held to her hair by a bonnet-shaped crown trimmed with orange blossoms, and she carried an arm bouquet of 12 gardenias.

Miss Ruffner Maid of Honor

Miss Charlotte Ruffner, of Raleigh, N. C., a cousin of the bride, was the maid of honor. She was gowned in tissue taffeta of soft yellow, fashioned with three-quarter-length puffed sleeves, sweetheart neckline and full skirt. They wore headpieces of natural flowers and carried colonial bouquets of lavender sweet peas and yellow freesias, tied with a wide green ribbon.

Bridesmaids were Miss Regina Donovan and Miss Betty Lou Donovan, sisters of the bride; Miss Diana Steers and Miss Barbara Simons. They wore tissue taffeta frocks of soft green made like the gown of the maid of honor, and carried white shasta daisies and yellow freesias, fashioned in lace paper-trimmed colonial bouquets and tied with wide yellow ribbon streamers.

Paul E. Rogers Is Best Man

Paul Elton Rogers was the best man and the ushers were William Brown, cousin of the bridegroom; James Porter, Lieut. Sidney Keel and Arthur Lee Thompson.

Following the ceremony there was a reception at the bride's home. The bride's mother was gowned in dull gold crepe, with a corsage of violets, and the mother of the bridegroom wore a violet costume and a corsage of orchids.

When the couple left for their wedding trip to Florida the bride was wearing a light blue gabardine suit, with British tan accessories and a gardenia corsage.

The bride attended Wilson Teachers College here and Lieut. Brown attended Cornell University.

Among the out-of-town guests were Mrs. Robert Huffner, of Raleigh, N. C.; Mrs. Whitney Trousdale, sister of the bridegroom, of New York; Mrs. Kenneth Holly and Miss Caroline Holly, of Corning, N. Y.

Miss Lillian Chenoweth, vice president general, and Mrs. Howard L. Hodgkins, honorary vice president general, assisted the hostesses in serving refreshments and greeting the guests. Only the officers of the 17 District chapters, the president of the National Society and her cabinet were invited to attend the reception.

Club Honors Mrs. Wallace

Among those serving at the tea table were: Mrs. Karl Le Compte, Mrs. Thomas F. Martin, Mrs. John B. Sullivan and Mrs. Martin F. Smith. Members of the hospitality committee were: Mrs. Roy O. Woodruff, Mrs. Cleveland Newton, Mrs. Robert W. Keane and Mrs. Frank W. Boykin.

Heart Patient

ALEXANDER WOOLLCOTT

Syracuse, N. Y., March 6 (AP).—Alexander Woollcott arrived here today for hospital treatment after a 225-mile journey by ambulance from his secluded island home on Lake Bomoseen, Vt.

The 55-year-old author, actor and critic as accompanied to the University Hospital of the Good Shepherd by his physician, Dr. Frode Jansen, who flew to Vermont yesterday.

Dr. Jansen declined comment on Woollcott's condition other than to say he was here for "observation." Woollcott was assisted into the hospital by attendants.

Howard Bull, Woollcott's valet, said the writer had received treatment for a heart condition.

Get '42 Tags Now, Van Duzer Urges Drivers

Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer yesterday appealed to District motorists "to avoid the last minute rush" and obtain their 1942 automobile plates as soon as possible.

All tag applications have been mailed, he declared, and warned car owners that if they have not received an application to make inquiries. More than 6000 warrants for unsatisfied traffic violation notices and failure to report change of address are holding up applications, he said.

Only 37,000 sets of tags have been distributed so far this year, a number 6000 behind the same time last year, the director.

The traffic director also asked motorists to hold their old plates until after the tag deadline—March 31—and then turn them into their gasoline dealer. Close to 200,000 pounds of steel are expected to be reclaimed for war material by the collection of the old license plates.

Reward Offered For $6600 Lost In Cash, Rings

Mrs. Clifford D. Watson, wife of a War Production Board industrial analyst, yesterday offered a "liberal reward" for the return of a purse containing $3100 in cash and $3500 worth of rings.

Mrs. Watson told police she discovered the loss of the valuable-laden alligator bag on arriving shortly after 10:30 p. m. Thursday at Union Station after taking a taxi with her husband from their residence, the Stratford Hotel, 28 E Street Northwest.

On discovering the loss she canceled plans to accompany her husband, former president of the Watson Brothers Steel Co., to Pittsburgh. She said the money represented Christmas gifts whose disposal she had not decided on and the jewelry consisted of four platinum rings.

Police advised her not to disclose the amount of the reward, Mrs. Watson said, but she reiterated it would be "liberal."

WPB Denies Copper 'Waste' In REA Lines

By Alfred Friendly
Post Staff Writer

War Production Board power officials yesterday flatly denied charges of a special House Military Affairs Subcommittee that they had wasted millions of pounds of copper in authorizing a Rural Electrification Administration transmission line in Arkansas to supply energy for a Government aluminum plant near Lake Catherine, Ark.

Instead, the officials contended that by authorizing the higher capacity line, requiring only 200 tons of copper more than alternate proposals of a private utility power pool, they were enabling transmission of 20,000 additional kilowatts into a war production area deficient in power and where power demands were mounting to such an extent that even the private utilities were now proposing further line construction to carry the future load.

The House subcommittee, headed by Representative Faddis (Democrat), of Pennsylvania, had pointed out in a report issued Wednesday, that construction of the REA line was disapproved by the Army-Navy Munitions Board and was not favored by the Arkansas Department of Public Utilities. The report declared that an alternate proposal of the private utilities, gathered in the Southwestern Power Pool, would have supplied ample power and that the WPB was guilty of reckless disregard for conservation of copper.

REA Line Capacity Higher

According to WPB power branch officials, however, the REA line requires one ton of copper for every 80 kilowatts of power transmitted, as against only 40 kilowatts per ton under the construction proposed by the private pool. For the additional 20,000 kilowatts which the REA line can transmit, but which the private grid could not, the ratio is 160 kilowatts per ton.

It was explained that in supplying the aluminum plant the WPB rejected REA proposals to supply all the power, and that the private utilities were contracted with to deliver 65,000 kilowatts, and REA to supply 22,500. At one point in the negotiations with the Defense Plant Corporation, it was reported, the private utilities threatened to supply no power whatsoever if REA were to have any part in th program, but withdrew from their position when Jesse Jones, then Federal Loan Administrator, was said to have declared:

"This sounds more like self-defense than national defense."

Other Plants in Area

In general, WPB power officials said, the Faddis Committee and the Munitions Board seemed to focus their attention solely on the needs of the Lake Catherine plant. Actually, they added, the power demands of nine ordnance plants and one arsenal in the area were such as to make the larger 70,000 kilowatt REA line vastly preferable to the 50,000 kilowatt private lines.

Officials also reviewed detailed technical figures in the Faddis report, challenging the accuracy of some and explaining others to support their contention that only 300 additional tons of copper were needed to transmit 20,000 additional kilowatts.

WPB aides also defended their agency's action in not issuing a stop order on two other REA projects condemned by the Faddis subcommittee. These projects, located in Texas, were to have been stopped under WPB orders of December 8, 1941, if they were less than 40 per cent completed. A War Department report found they were less than 40 per cent completed, but construction continued.

In answer to the committee charge, WPB officials said they had ended construction of one and were about to stop the other, but had not acted on the complaint alone, preferring, as in all charges of noncompliance with Government orders, to give the accused a hearing. Once the facts were verified, action followed promptly, they said.

Nelson Expected to Reply

It was expected yesterday that Donald M. Nelson, WPB chief, would reply soon to the Faddis subcommittee. Nelson was not called to testify before the subcommittee when it was nivestigating the controversy.

President Roosevelt alluded to this in his press conference yesterday. Asked about the report, the President countered with the question: Wasn't there any other side presented?

A reporter replied that he understood only one side was heard at the committee investigation.

That was what he understood too, the President snapped.

Plant Units Closed Pending Blast Probe

By the Associated Press

Burlington, Iowa, March 6.—Lieut. Gen. William S. Knudsen said tonight all melt units handling explosives at the Iowa Ordnance Plant will remain closed while an ordnance board of experts conducts a "thorough investigation" into an explosion which killed at least 16 workmen Wednesday night.

"The melt units handling the explosives were shut down by the officials of the plant and will remain shut down while a thorough investigation and check of equipment and processing is performed by the ordnance board of experts headed by Brig. Gen. E. McFarland," he asserted.

"The investigation will be pushed with vigor so that the melt loading operations under susupension may be resumed as early as possible," the Army's production chief declared in a statement just before he left for St. Louis, Mo.

Gen. Knudsen said other work not involving the mixing of high explosives will continue.

Loading will be resumed after the board has made its findings, he added.

The general said the action resulted from a "preliminary examination of the premises of the ordnance plant damaged by the explosion."

Barge Blast Kills 2

Houston, Tex., March 6 (AP).—Two workmen were killed and 12 injuried in an explosion today aboard a barge at the Schmidt Barge Co. works on Greens Bayou.

The barge had been partially loaded with oil before it was taken to the plant for minor repairs. Men working nearby believed that a spark from a welder's torch ignited the oil.

Fire Sweeps Through Wool Storage Plant

Boston, March 6 (AP).—Fire of undetermined origin swept through the six-story National Wool Marketing Corporation storage plant—housing 1,500,000 pounds of wool—today, but company officials said that most of the clip could be salvaged and the loss would be comparatively low.

Fire Chief Samuel Pope estimated the damage to the building and contents at $250,000.

Gems Stolen

Pair Hunted In Death of Rich Woman

By the Associated Press

New York, March 6.—Murray Hirschl, 42, was held under $25,000 bail today as a material witness in the slaying of Mrs. Susan Flora Reich, 52, a wealthy Polish refugee, and police announced the recovery of some of the $2000 worth of jewelry stolen from the woman who was bound, gagged and left to suffocate.

Assistant District Attorney Jacob Grumet said Hirschl was an uncle of a man known to police as Eli Shonbrun, who, with an attractive former model, was sought throughout the city by more than 100 police for questioning.

Police identified Shonbrun as the man who they said they believed registered at the Hotel Sutton with an attractive woman as Mr. and Mrs. Ted Leopold and in whose hurriedly vacated suite the body of Mrs. Reich was found yesterday. Police said the registration names were fictitious. Mrs. Reich went to the hotel room to keep a luncheon engagement.

Grumet said it had been established that Shonbrun visited his uncle, Hirschl, last night and attempted to sell him jewelry allegedly stolen from the woman.

Hirschl was asked to try to sell or pawn the jewelry after he had refused to buy it himself, Grumet said.

Dies Is Called Fifth Wheel vs. Fifth Column

Representative Thomas H. Eliot (Democrat), of Cambridge, Mass., reopened his feud with the Dies Committee yesterday by calling the committee "just a fifth wheel in the fight against the Fifth Column."

He asked Chairman Martin Dies (Democrat), of Texas, not to publish his proposed report dealing with the Nazi "smear" compaign against President Roosevelt.

"I very much fear that in his unselfish zeal," Eliot said, "the chairman of the Dies Committee will revive all these rotten pamphlets, those antisemitic leaflets, those nasty lies that treveled about the country in 1936, and the years before and after.

"Fortunately they have been forgotten for sometime. But now, it seems, he will revive them, and publish them and send them out again across the land—now when our Commander in Chief needs all the honest help that we can give him.

"How Goebbels must revel in the thought that in all innocence, and with the highest purpose, all the anti-Roosevelt lies are going to be brought to life again.

"I plead for the discontinuance of the Dies Committee," Eliot said. "For the chairman's announcement, if it means what is says, shows that however patriotic the motives of Mr. Dies may be, his contemplated actions will be the answer to a Nazi prayer."

Eliot was cut off halfway through his speech by a point of no quorum, raised by Representative Keefe (Republican), of Wisconsin, after Keefe had held a hurried conference with Representative Starnes (Democrat), of Alabama, a member of the Dies Committee. The hour was late and a quorum unlikely, so Majority Leader McCormack moved that the House adjourn.

Before he was cut off Eliot questioned the value of the Dies Committee's recent report on Japanese espionage activity. He offered documents to show that most of the material contained in the report had been available for years at the Library of Congress and the Department of Justice.

Eliot flourished a map of the Pacific, which the committee reported it had great difficulty in obtaining. Eliot said the map was published in 1935 as a supplement of the Japanese magazine King and, until the war, could be obtained by anybody who wrote for it.

He questioned Dies' statement that the Administration prevented the committee from releasing information on the Japanese before the Pearl Harbor attack. He quoted a letter from Attorney General Biddle, dated February 20, 1942, that "There was never any attempt or suggestion that the Dies Committee was not permitted to reveal the facts last September."

The Federal Diary

By Jerry Kluttz

Law Bars Move to Drop Saturday Half-Holiday

Don't put too much credence in reports that the Saturday afternoon holiday for Federal employes will be wiped out for the duration. It probably will be eventually, but not for awhile; that is, not until Congress changes the present law on employe working hours. Several agencies have considered placing their employes on a six-day, 48-hour week but they ran head-on into the law that requires compensatory time off to be given for Saturday afternoon work so they abandoned their plans.

Congress, in 1940, exempted the War and Navy Departments from the law that requires compensatory time off for Saturday work. On January 12, 1942, the President ordered War and Navy employes on a 48-hour week. The President could request all other employes here to give up Saturday afternoons—and this suggestion is understood to have been made—but the employes, other than those in War and Navy, would be entitled to time off during the week for the hours put in Saturday afternoons.

It now appears that Congress will be asked by the President to fix a uniform labor policy for all Federal workers. Or it may be asked to give the President power to fix hours, wages and working conditions of Federal workers Some definite labor policy in Government is bound to come. The Administration can't escape its responsibility of making an effort to treat its civilian employes equally. There are far too many inconsistencies now and with the Government growing like it is, a fixed policy is inevitable.

Of the 1,800,000 Federal workers now, more than 700,000 are eligible for overtime pay over 40 hours. About 350,000 others—in the Postoffice Department—are given compensatory time off for hours worked more than 40 hours. The great mass of per annum employes—"white collar" workers—are subjected to all kinds of hours and practically no overtime on the theory that they are paid to do a job and they must work until the job is finished. However—and this is surprising—it is now estimated that 125,000 per annum employes, many of them "white-collar" workers, are eligible to be paid overtime over 40 hours and many of that number are actually being paid.

Showed the Way Once

The Government showed industry the way in reducing hours of work to spread employment in the good old peaceful days. Now, with a manpower shortage staring the country in the face, it's argued that the Government should again lead the way by lengthening the hours of all its employes. It's suggested, for example, that a 44 or 48-hour week be established in Government and that overtime be started after the longer work week for all employes except department heads, supervisors, and persons in the higher salary brackets. Such a proposal would wipe out much of the overtime paid the 650,000 Federal Workers.

The Administration is faced with the cold fact that it can't lay down a fixed labor policy of its employes unless some thing similar is done in industry. After all, isn't your Uncle Sam putting up the money indirectly for all the millions of war workers in private industries? And why shouldn't these employes be called on to sacrifice in the same way as those who are paid directly by Federal check? If the Government alone invoked a 44 or 48-hour week employes would quit by the thousands to take jobs in private industry where they are paid time and a half over 40 hours. Briefly, a Nation-wide labor policy is needed.

The Postoffice problem is forcing a showdown. Postoffice wants to work its employes a 6-day, 48-hour week. It is willing to pay its employes straight time for the additional eight hours. Much of the President's time during the past week has been consumed by the employe labor problem. Postoffice is short on man power at a time when its business is at a new peak. The President may sidestep the big issue by working out a compromise, but it would only be a stop-gap as the question of a Government labor policy must be met, and the sooner the better, for all concerned.

Better Luck Next Time

Richmond, Va., March 6 (AP).—A Virginia ham, shipped November 26 as a Christmas present for the wife of an American Army officer in the Philippines, was returned to the sender the other day with the Philippine mark: "Postoffice closed."

It had traveled just about 20,000 miles.

Tire Conservation Note

Police of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., are missing no bets in their effort to conserve tires. Detectives who arrested three persons in a raid walked them to jail rather than call out the patrol wagon. And all cruiser car cops have been armed with brooms—to sweep streets clean of glass after traffic accidents.

Information Center Here To Top All

World's Biggest Under Construction On the Avenue, Between 14th, 15th

What's that big temporary building the Government is putting up on Pennsylvania Avenue between Fourteenth and Fifteenth Streets Northwest?

Well, it's going to house the world's largest, most expensive and most complicated "information" center.

"U. S. Information" will be the most conspicuous sign on the new building, and it will show the way to one of the world's largest information desks. It will be on the central portion of the building, and this portion will go up three stories while the other part is two. Here's some more data on what will be contained in the $280,000 building:

The desk will be oval shaped running all the way around a studio-like room 100 feet deep and about 50 feet wide. Inside the oval will be placed the telephones and stacks of material needed for handing out over the counter. About 100 girls, maybe in uniform, will man the desk at peak periods.

Light From Third Story

Light for the room will come from third-story windows that give the studio effect. Wall space, which will be two stories high, will be used for exhibits of a mural nature. Each exhibit will be on the war effort and will be changed each month, according to the plans.

Officials in the office of Director Lowell Mellett of the Office of Government Reports yesterday stressed, however, that the "murals" will be inexpensively prepared and that some of them may be made on film and thrown on the walls much enlarged.

In the central huge information room all "across the counter" questions will be answered. If the visitor wishes more than pamphlets or directions, he goes next to a row of adjacent offices and gets his information trouble diagnosed by an "expert." The "expert" will know what division of the Government should be able to answer the question and will contact that division, if in doubt. If the visitor needs to consult more than one agency, the "expert" will serve as intermediary all the way.

Not a "Know-All"

This "expert," it is said, will not pose as one who knows all the answers himself. He will help the inquirer find out where to get the answers to his questions.

Usually the final answers will be given by groups of liaison men assigned to the office by all the Government agencies involved in the war effort. Offices for these men are also to be on the first floor and the visitor can talk to somebody about Navy contracts and Army contracts without leaving the building, and probably without getting anything specific done.

In addition to giving oral information, the office will handle hundreds of letters. It will answer only the first question of jobseekers, however, and not attempt to become a Government job-finding agency. Information of the type anticipated and job getting will not mix, officials state.

A personnel increase of possible 200 will be needed to carry on the additional activities, it was estimated yesterday.

To Be Painted Off-White

The building, which will be painted an off-white, will be the first building large enough for the divisions of the Office of Government Reports—now scattered in three parts of town. The United States Information Service, the Division of Press Intelligence and the Field Reporting Division are the three main portions of the office, to which the Office to Coordinate Government Films is now "appended."

The structure will be paid for out of emergency funds allotted the Public Buildings Administration.

Centralization of information was asked by President Roosevelt in a letter to Director Mellett in February. In the letter the President said: "It has become more and more difficult for those coming to Washington on specific business to locate the Government official who can give authoritative answers to their questions."

Approximately 150 women wardens are being sworn in in the area, after which they will receive arm bands and whistles

Landlords Asked to Ease Lease Rules

The Federal Decentralization Service called on Washington landlords yesterday to allow employes of agencies transferred from Washington to cancel their leases.

"The Government is, of course, powerless to step in where a transferred employe has an unexpired lease on an apartment or house," said Fred E. Taylor, manager of the service, in a letter to all District landlords.

"It is necessary, therefore, to appeal to the public spirit of the landlord to assist the transferred employe by permitting the cancellation of his lease upon the employe's paying rent to the date of vacating."

Likening those transferred to war evacuees of other nations, Taylor added: "You can have the satisfaction that you are making a real contribution to the war effort if you assist in the matter, for it is of great importance that these employes of the Government shall be relieved of worry that may affect their efficiency."

Taylor said the Government was doing everything in its power to alleviate hardships accompanying removals and asked landlords to do their share.

Workers being transferred, he added, have been asked to give their landlords all possible notice.

Father, Baby Saved As Fire Sweeps D. C. Apartment

A 21-year-old Government employe was burned severely and his 18-month-old child was carried to the street in a fire that broke out in their first floor apartment at 2526 Seventeenth Street Northwest last night.

John E. Brown, 21, employed by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, was treated at Emergency Hospital for severe burns on his face, hands and body.

Fred Wilson, who also occupies the apartment, saw the place in flames when he returned home. He hastily picked up the child in his arms and carried it to the street in safety. Meantime, firemen arrived and took Brown from the apartment.

The wives of Brown and Wilson live at the apartment but police said they were not at home when the fire broke out.

NYA Staff Here Already Pared To Meet Order

Having anticipated a war order issued by NYA Administrator Aubrey Williams, the D. C. branch has no more program reductions to make, Director Albert Miller told The Post yesterday.

"All of the 866 young men and women now employed here on NYA out-of-school projects are working at essential, war-connected jobs within the meaning of the order," said Miller. "No further curtailment is called for."

The Williams letter, made public yesterday after being sent to all National Youth Administration State heads, ordered immediate termination of "all improvements and construction carried on in cooperation with public agencies primarily for local benefit."

"All available funds," it stated, "should be concentrated on projects to turn out workers for the war effort, either on industrial production lines or for the Army and Navy."

"All Else Must Wait"

The State administrators were advised to "close those projects which are not preparing producers for the war machines and enlarge those that are—at once!"

"I am not unmindful of the adjustments this plan of action will require," said Williams. "I realize that it will mean terminating projects such as school buildings and community services that, while very desirable, are not essential to the war effort.

"But I repeat, eliminate those projects that are not turning out war production workers to go into the war effort and the Army or Navy. All else must wait!"

Miller said there are now 233 enrollees, including a few women, learning trades here in preparation for wartime industries. Welding, sheet metal work, lathe operation, automotive mechanics and drafting are being taught at the old Dennison School.

In addition, there are 633 on such projects as nurses' aides, public health, laundry and industrial sewing, all of which comes within the "war essential" class, according to Miller.

Students Unaffected

He explained that in a short time the sewing group will begin making blackout curtains and kindred supplies for Government buildings.

Unaffected by the Williams conversion order, either locally or nationally, are the high school and college youths receiving NYA assistance. There are 963 of these in the Capital, more than 200,000 in the Nation.

At national NYA headquarters, it was said that the new war retrenchment policy will result in at least 25,000 being affected, either by being dropped altogether or transferred to "must" duties. Approximately 185,000 are now employed in out-of-school work.

The following activities are to be wiped out at once:

Handicraft, research and statistical survey, library service, recreational assistants, nursery school aides, institutional services, music teaching, landscaping and public grounds improvement, construction and repair of local recreational facilities.

Father White, Catholic U. Law Dean, Takes Post With Navy

Made Commander, Assigned to Duty Here as Chaplain

REV. ROBERT WHITE

The Rev. Robert J. White, dean of Catholic University Law School, will reenter the Navy today with the rank of commander. He will be temporarily assigned to duty in Washington as chaplain.

Father White served as dean of the law school since 1937. In 1941 he was reappointed to a five-year term. While he was at Catholic University, Father White originated the annual red mass, marking the opening of court sessions in the United States, which is attended by members of the Supreme Court and subordinate courts of the United States.

During World War I, Father White served as a lieutenant in the Navy, assigned to transport duty and special foreign service posts in England, France, Italy and Yugoslavia. He was national chaplain of the American Legion from 1933 to 1935. He served also as an American representative to the Congress of Allied Veterans from 1934 to 1937.

Father White was born in Concord, Mass., in September, 1893. He attended Harvard College and Harvard Law School and practiced law in New England until 1927 when he entered the Sulpician Seminary, Catholic University. He was ordained a priest in 1931. Father White has been a member of the faculty since his ordination.

Last December he was appointed to the District Alien Enemy Board by Attorney General Biddle.

Blackout Attack Prisoner Waives Md. Extradition

William T. Moore, 32, ironworker, of 1328 E Street Southeast, accused by a 16-year-old Washington high school girl of having raped her during the blackout Tuesday night near Oxon Hill, Md., yesterday waived extradition before Judge George Neilson. He was removed to Upper Marlboro, Md., by Prince Georges County police. He is being held without bond.

Moore, who is married and has a 9-year-old daughter, admitted to police that he was out with the girl at the time of the alleged assault, but denied he had attacked her.

He will be given a hearing before Police Court Judge Walter L. Green at Upper Marlboro Monday morning at 10.

War Building Bus Unit Held Traffic Aid

Terminal Presents New Opportunities To Stagger Work Hour of Employes

Establishment of a major bus terminal inside the new War Department Building in Arlington opens a new field for the possibilities of staggered work-hours within the various Government agencies.

The Budget Bureau, which has the say, accepted the recommendations of the Capital Transit Co., the District Traffic Department and the Public Utilities Commission and ordered staggering of hours among the Federal agencies on January 26.

But it would not go further and adopt the suggestion that the schedules within the individual departments be so adjusted as to spread the employes' arrival and departure hours over an hour's space. The Budget Bureau thought this would "do no good" and would "impair the efficiency of a cohesive department."

Workers at the tremendous War Department building, now under construction in Virginia, however, will go to work in five shifts, beginning at 8 a. m. and continuing to arrive at 15 minute intervals until 9.

Hankin in Favor

The Capital Transit Co., which cooperated with the War Department in designing the two-lane terminal to accommodate 15 to 20 buses, believes the necessity and efficiency of this plan will convince the Budget Bureau that intra-departmental staggering of hours should be universally ordered.

Public Utilities Chairman Gregory Hankin said he too was in favor of any system whereby the traffic load would be equalized in the rush hours to 15-minute peaks. This, he said, would mean 30,000 persons arriving at work every quarter of an hour between 8 and 9 a. m. and departing in the same order between 4 and 5 p. m.

"In spite of the January 26 order," he said, "there are 57,500 persons trying to get home at 5 o'clock. And the morning hours are distributed as unproportionately."

Yet the Budget Bureau requested yesterday that departmental hours be readjusted so as to put more persons on the 8:15 arrival time—when 48,000 already jam the streets and buses on the way to work.

First Indoor Terminal

The terminal at the War Department will be the first private indoor bus terminal in the vicinity of Washington. Besides two bus lanes, there will be one lane for taxis. It is estimated that the lanes can be cleared every five minutes, and can pass 16,000 to 20,000 persons into the building every hour.

One system of staggering hours at this building was instituted last month, but was stymied by the change to War Time on February 9. The laborers at work on the construction had agreed to begin at 7:30 in the morning, but when the clocks were set up an hour, it was too dark at that time to do any construction work.

The hour was then changed to 8:30, later to 8, which put this great crowd on the buses at the same time the Navy Department workers were traveling. Both groups are putting up with the clogging of transportation channels until the progress of the sun, within a week or so, will allow the construction workmen to resume the 7:30 schedule.

Nurse's Attacker Given 3 to 9 Years in Prison

Jack N. Harper, 22-year-old Negro charged with attempting to rape a Providence Hospital nurse last month, was given a jail sentence of three to nine years yesterday by District Court Justice James W. Morris.

The nurse told police that Harper attacked her in the street as she left the hospital, but said that he fled after she had fought him off.

Harper admitted to police that he had attacked the girl and pleaded guilty to a charge of assault with intent to commit rape.

In sentencing him, Justice Morris asserted that the offense was a particularly grievous one, of a kind which "has got to be stopped, particularly in this time of national emergency."

Pinball Games Illegal Here After April 15

United States Attorney Edward M. Curran yesterday served notice that all pinball machines paying off in free games or prizes of any kind will be outlawed from Washington after April 15.

Climaxing an investigation begun last September, after complaints had been received that schoolchildren were feeding their lunch money into the machines, Curran issued a letter to Police Superintendent Maj. Edward J. Kelly asking that the police warn all operators to oust the machines by that date.

It was expected that the exodus order would eventually result in a test court case, to determine whether the games of gaudy lights and jingling bells are illegal gambling devices or games of skill.

Pinball was recently banned from New York City by a 23-page decision of Magistrate Ambrose J. Haddock's, resulting in a wholesale police clean-up. Haddock declared them gambling devices, even when paying off in free games rather than coins, on the theory that "combining the element of chance with the inducement of receiving something for nothing results in gambling."

Gambling—Pay or Not

The magistrate held further that machines which did not pay off with anything were gambling games because they took advantage of the player's "sporting instinct."

In 1932 the United States Court of Appeals here held that electric crane machines—devices in which player sought to manipulate a metal claw so as to grab up prizes from within a glass case—were games of skill and could not be confiscated.

The district attorney's April deadline will give operators time to remove the machines before any attempt at confiscation is resorted to, but a court precedent will have to be established before they can be finally outlawed.

Spelling tentative death to the city's "penny arcades," the pinball banning order has been given the backing of Commissioner Guy Mason, who has attacked them as "inducements to children." He asserted that should legal ousters fail, he would "take the thing to Congress."

Going forward at the same time as Curran's investigation was a survey conducted by the District budget office, seeking to determine if the machines were legal and, if so, whether they were taxable.

10 Deny Guilt In Numbers Case

Ten persons charged with violating District numbers laws yesterday pleaded not guilty when they were arraigned before United States Commissioner Needham C. Turnage and the cases were continued until March 20.

They were arrested during a raid Thursday in the 1600 block Vermont Avenue Northwest. Two of the suspects also were charged with selling whiskey without a license. All were Negroes.

Opera Stars to Sing at Victory Rally of Italian-Americans

In a demonstration of loyalty and unity, District of Columbia Italian-American leaders will sponsor a Victory Rally tomorrow night to sell defense bonds and stamps and will present a $3 musical program free.

Giovanni Martinelli and Dusolina Giannini, stars of the Metropolitan Opera Co., will sing at the rally, to be held in Central High School auditorium at 8 p. m. The program will be under auspices of the Lido Civic Club.

Speakers will be Ugo Carusi, Italian-born executive assistant to Attorney General Francis Biddle, and H. L. Rust, jr., chairman of the District of Columbia Defense Savings Committee. Harry Marselli, of the Department of Justice tax division, will preside. The invocation will be by the Rev. Dr. Pasquale Prospero Parente, of Catholic University.

There will be no admission fee and the public is invited to attend, Marselli said yesterday. A 20-minute intermission will be provided for sales of defense bonds and stamps.

Martinelli and Miss Giannini, who are donating their services for the special event, will give a complete joint recital. The tenor and the soprano will sing duets from "Tosca" and "Aida," as well as arias from "Cavalleria Rusticana," "Pagliacci" and "Jocelyn," and a number of folk songs.

The Central High School auditorium seats about 2800 persons. Accommodations will be on a first come, first served basis.

D. C. Rites Pay Tribute To Sousa

People who loved the striding, tuneful marches of John Philip Sousa went to his grave in Congressional Cemetery yesterday and paid tribute to his memory on the tenth anniversary of his death. His music, it was said there, will live forever, setting millions of feet to marching through the years.

Oscar Short, now a member of the United States Navy Band, the last cornet soloist in Sousa's Band, saluted Sousa's granite tombstone and played, solo, "Lead Kindly Light." Short had been with Sousa's Band from 1925 to 1931. Other Sousa bandsmen, now in the United States Navy Band, who went to the exercises, were Lloyd Folts, trombonist, 1927-28; Charles Nutick, oboe and English horn, 1927-28; John Urban, clarinet, 1911-17; Herbert Weber, Sousaphone, 1924-26; George Jenkins, clarinet, 1921-25, and John Liegl, clarinet, 1921-28.

The exercises were the seventh conducted by the Boy Scout Sousa Memorial Service organization, and were opened with prayer by the Rev. Edward Gabler, rector of Christ Episcopal Church. In a brief address, Representative George D. O'Brien (Democrat), of Michigan, said that "Sousa endowed the Nation and the world with beautiful music." Lawrence J. Bach, 517 Third Street Southeast, who was a member of Sousa's favored Boy Scout Troop No. 2 in Detroit when the band leader had his Great Lakes Band during the World War, said he hoped the memorial exercises would be a permanent observance here each March 6. Bach founded the organization.

Other participating were Osmund Varela, of 18 William Lane, Chevy Chase, a nephew of Sousa; Capt. R. D. Workman, chaplain, U. S. N.; Lieut. Charles Brendler, leader, U. S. Navy Band, and Marine Corps buglers, who sounded taps.

In Reading, Pa., where Sousa, at age of 77, died on March 6, 1932, Capt. Taylor Branson, retired leader of the U. S. Marine Band, spoke yesterday at Sousa memorial exercises. Sousa was renowned for such internationally known marches as "The Stars and Stripes Forever" and "The Washington Post March."

The dance will be held at the All-State Hotel, at 8:30 p. m.

Taxi Pick-up Service to Be Extended

P.U.C. Acts to Put Teeth Into Rules For Protection Of Riding Public

Taxicab pickup service is to be extended indefinitely, the Public Utilities Commission announced late yesterday. At the same time the commission said it had put teeth into the taxi regulations to prevent unscrupulous drivers from abusing the pick-up service.

The extension of the service was indicated by the overwhelming approval given at a public hearing Thursday, called to measure the success of the month's trial of the jitney plan.

Official order has not yet been given for the continuance of the pick-up, because there are some legal points that have yet to be reviewed. However, the P. U. C. was unanimous in approving the plan.

Engineer Commissioner Charles W. Kutz made one reservation: That he did not approve the revision of the regulation which permits a driver to charge full fare if he has only a single occupant in a pick-up cab going from zone one to zone two in the afternoon.

Kutz entered the same protest last week when this charge was allowed at the petition of the drivers. He said the driver's inability to get further passengers should not be charged to the rider who had entered the cab expecting to pay only 20 cents.

Drivers Ask Change

The drivers at the hearing, however, asked that this full fare privilege also be allowed for single morning rides from zone two to zone one and it is possible that this might be one of the "minor changes" which P. U. C. Chairman Gregory Hankin announced would be seen in the final order.

The barbs which the P. U. C. wrote into the regulations are directed principally against drivers not participating in the pick-up service, who nevertheless pick up additional passengers and charge them all the full fare, instead of applying pick-up rates.

Hankin had received complaints of this being done during the month the 20-cent service has been in effect, and corroborating testimony was offered at Thursday's public hearing.

Offending drivers had justified their overcharges, the P. U. C. announced, "on the theory that the rate orders do not, in specific terms, provide for a division of rates among the passengers thus transported."

Two Amendments Listed

In order to protect the passengers and force the drivers to prorate the charge when operating a regular cab on pick-up principles, the existing taxi regulations were amended to provide that:

Unauthorized cabs may not take on additional passengers without the consent of the original rider.

After obtaining the first passenger's consent, the driver may pick up further fares only on condition that the total charge to all passengers does not exceed the prevailing rate for the entire trip, that the total charge shall be divided equally among all the passengers, except that none shall pay more than the prevailing rate for his trip, and that no passenger shall pay more than the difference between the prevailing rate for the entire trip and the amounts already collected therefor.

Hankin announced that offenders may be recommended for revocation of thir hackers' permits, or may be prosecuted by the corporation counsel in the Police Court, where they may be fined up to $200.

Alsab Among Record Entry in $50,000 Widener

DiMaggio Refuses $40,000, Yanks' Final Offer

This Morning

—With Shirley Povich

Miami, Fla., March 6.—Al Sabath, the Chicago lawyer who owns the faded Cinderella horse, Alsab, is gambling $500 and getting odds of 100 to 1, in tomorrow's Widener Handicap. That is the starting fee, $500, and the return in purse money on Sabath's investment would be $50,000 if his little bay colt gets his nose home in front.

POVICH

You could have knocked over the press box experts with a $2.40 mutuel ticket when Alsab's starting fee was posted by Sabath today. Aghast is the word for it, I guess. There were more reasons why Alsab didn't belong in the race than there are tips in the course of a day's racing. But it is all very clear now, Sabath needs the money, even as you and I. Alsab won $110,000 as a 2-year-old last season but Sabath is not a rich man. He lives very well, incidentally.

The talk here is that it is very unsmart of Sabath to run Alsab in the Widener where he is meeting older horses at a route he has never gone before. Alsab has been soundly whipped in three races at Hialeah during the meeting and has showed nothing to indicate he could win the Widener. The horse, moreover, is underweight. The suspicion is that the Sabath Stable is chucking Alsab's chances of winning the Derby in May. The folks who bet thousands of dollars on him as the favorite in the Derby's winter book will be exceedingly unhappy to learn that Alsab is in the Widener.

No 3-year-old has ever won the Widener yet in the six years since it has been a Hialeah feature, the only 3-year-old whose trainer was brash enough to enter him, Woof Woof, in 1937, was never worth a dime thereafter as a stake horse. Moreover, Alsab is carrying 109 pounds, three pounds over the scale for 3-year-olds, and they are sending him out to beat such older horses as Market Wise, Attention, Challedon and Mioland.

Alsab Not 3 Years Old Yet

Alsab, in fact, isn't a 3-year-old yet, despite the fact the turf recognizes him as such. He was a late foal and his third birthday is more than five weeks away. He has not yet taken on the maturity that is supposed to make 3-year-olds better runners. The handicappers recognize the difference in the abilities of 3 and 4-year-olds when they put the top weight scale for 4-year-olds at 128, and for 3-year-olds at 106.

Alsab, of course, would send expert opinion into hiding for a long spell if he galloped off with tomorrow's $50,000 purse. In the morning line he is being rated at 10 to 1, whereas Market Wise is being held at 2 to 1. Alsab is going into the race as a poor risk, but if he comes out of it the winner he will be entitled to acclaim, indeed, as the wonder horse.

There is one thing in Alsab's favor, however, and that is the jockey who will be on his back. Nick Wall is the lad, and Wall is an old hand at beating rich stake favorites with lightly weighted horses. Particularly has Wall been poison to the Californian, "Lucky Charles" Howard, who has Mioland in tomorrow's race and has reason to rest uneasy what with Wall riding. Wall was on the lightly weighted Esposa in the Bowie Handicap of 1937 and got that long shot up by a lip to beat Howard's Seabiscuit. Again it was Wall who was riding Stagehand under a feather and nosed out Howard's Seabiscuit.

That little affair cost Howard the $100,000 purse of the Santa Anita Handicap.

One of Howard's horses met up with Wall again last year and this time it was Mioland, running in the $100,000 Santa Anita Handicap. Again it was Wall beating Howard, this time with the long shot Bay View. One of the proven maxims of the big stake races is "bet on Wall on the light weight of the field." He also has to his credit a victory on Menow over the supposedly unbeatable War Admiral in the $50,000 Massachusetts Handicap at Suffolk a couple of years ago. But all of Wall's magic is going to be insufficient to get Alsab home in tomorrow's $50,000 race, seemingly.

Great Field Lines Up for Classic

The Widener is attracting a field the likes of which has never been assembled for any all-age race. The shut-down of California racing made Hialeah the Mecca of almost every fine horse in training. Only Whirlaway is missing from the list of great horses of the past two years. In Challedon, the race presents 1940's horse of the year; in Alsab it has the 2-year-old wonder of 1941; in Market Wise a horse that withstood training better than Whirlaway last season and beat him; in Attention a nag that licked Whirlaway as both a two and 3-year-old; and in Mioland one of the better older horses of current racing. Besides there are Pictor, Dit, Our Boots and Porter's Cap.

If all 22 horses go to the post, the Widener may see a revival of the old-fashioned walk-up start, inasmuch as the stall gates hold only 14 entries. An alternative would be to put two stall gates together, with one end protruding into the infield, but with enough stalls to accommodate 20 horses on the track.

Only a few of the riders in the race have had any experience, incidentally, with the walk-up start. The winner? We think it will be, roll the drums, professor, Mioland.

Alsab Among Record Entry In Widener

Today's $50,000 Turf Classic Draws 22 Horses; Favorite Is Market Wise

By Gayle Talbot
Associated Press Sports Writer

Miami, Fla., March 6.—A whopping field of 22 thoroughbreds, including the little "wonder colt" of last year, Alsab, has been nominated to battle it out over the mile and a quarter Hialeah Park course tomorrow in the $50,000 Added Widener Handicap, richest horse race of the winter season.

The number of owners who planked down their final $500 entrance fee stunned the track stewards and created an urgent housing problem. All afternoon they were out measuring the width of the flower bordered course and trying to figure out some method whereby Starter George Cassidy could get that many steeds away at once.

The one thing that appeared certain was that the race would not be run in two sections, no matter if they were forced to rip out a section of fence at the starting point. Such a procedure would force the track to put up two $50,000 prizes. The most popular guess, as a matter of fact, was that about 16 or 17 horses would answer the bugle at 4:30 (E. W. T.) tomorrow, a number that can be handled without too much difficulty. The starting gate, which accommodates 14, might be dispensed with for the big race.

30,000 Fans Expected

Prospects were that the biggest crowd in modern Hialeah history, probably over 30,000, would jam the plant to watch Market Wise try to take another fall out of the finest bunch of stake horses ever seen in the South—Mioland, Challedon, Porter's Cap, Attention, Our Boots, Alsab and the others. Owner Lou Tufano's big bay Market Wise, an impressive victor in his last two starts over most of the horses he will meet tomorrow, still was a firm 2-1 favorite.

Inclusion of Alsab among the nominees even though his owner, Al Sabath, still had not committed himself definitely to starting his pet, put the finishing touches on the race's appeal.

Many turfmen declare that the youngster is being sent completely out of his class.

The mere fact that he was a sensational 2-year-old last season doesn't give him any license to run against the Market Wises and Miolands, they say, no matter how much weight he is conceded.

But that won't keep the crowd from turning out to see the youngster run nor the Chicago faction from backing him at the mutuel windows. Neither are the hunch players likely to overlook the fact that the last two Widener winners, Big Pebble and Many Stings, packed the same light weight that will be on Alsab's back, 109 pounds.

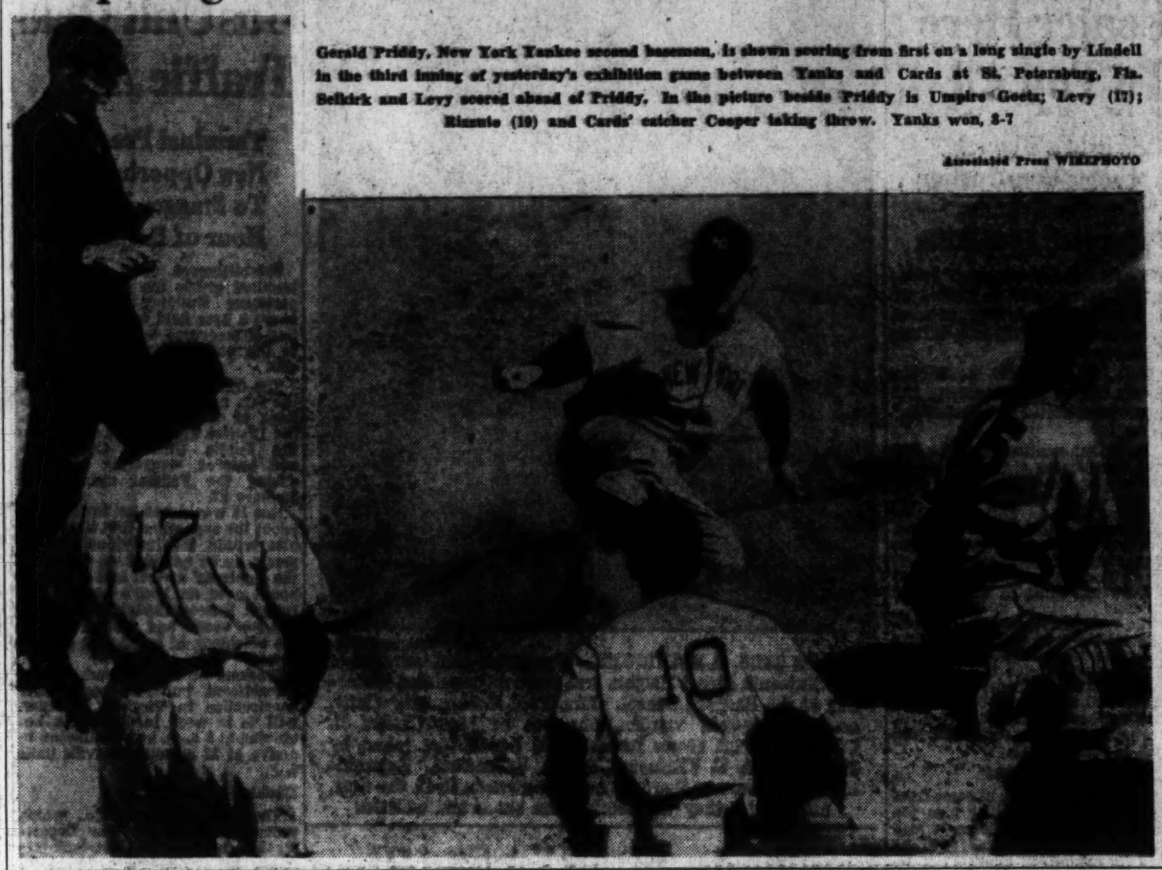
Threat to Favorite

The probable odds still had the Corning and Hanger entry of Attention and Dit as the greatest threat to Market Wise at 5 to 1. Attention was the one they feared—not Dit. Mrs. Parker Corning's 4-year-old scored one of last season's rare victories over Whirlaway, and he ran a strong second to Market Wise a week ago in the Eastern Airlines purse. Don Meade, who rode him in that race, and will steer him again tomorrow, thinks he has the winner. A big point in Attention's favor is that he has great early speed, and that is important in such a big field as will run in the Widener.

At 6-to-1 were Mioland, solid choice of the West Coast, coupled with his C. S. Howard stablemate, Porter's Cap, and Our Boots. W. L. Brann's pair, Challedon and Pictor, were 8 to 1. Fourth greatest money-winner of all time with earnings of $324,335, Challedon could jump into challenging position to the great Seabiscuit who holds the world record of $437,730, by a victory in this one. If 16 start tomorrow, the winning owner will pocket a net prize of $54,450.

Get Off and Gramps were posted at 10-1, Alsab, 15-1, and the remainder were strung all the way up to Delray at 100-1. There was but slight inclination around the track to try to pick a long shot, the feeling being that one of the "class" horses was bound to come through. The solid vote was for Market Wise. Both his owner, Lou Tufano, and his trainer, George Carroll, were supremely confident. Especially if there was a dry track, which appeared likely.

Opening Game Can't Be Far Off . . . A Yank Scores



Gerald Priddy, New York Yankee second baseman, is shown scoring from first on a long single by Lindell in the third inning of yesterday's exhibition game between Yanks and Cards at St. Petersburg, Fla. Sammy Angott Soundly Whips Montgomery

By the United Press

New York, March 6.—Lightweight Champion Sammy Angott proved to a doubting world tonight that he is a rough, tough fighting man by winning an easy 12-round nontitle decision over the No. 1 challenger, Bob Montgomery, Philadelphia Negro, before 11,000 surprised fans at Madison Square Garden.

Bull-shouldered Angott, who had gone into the ring a 12-5 underdog in the betting, gave Montgomery the worst beating of his career, defeating the taller Negro far more decisively than in their first bout at Philadelphia in November, 1940, when Angott took a ten-round decision.

Since that night Montgomery had hammered out a streak of 15 straight victories and had been far more impressive in beating Lew Jenkins than was Angott when Angott won the lightweight crown from Jenkins in December.

Bout One-Sided

Angott belted his man to the body and head at long range, and held Montgomery at close quarters so that the Negro in-fighting specialist could not take advantage of their nearness.

Speedy Angott's body attack slowed up Montgomery as early as the fifth round and left him so weakened by the ninth that a short right uppercut to the chin dropped Montgomery to the canvas for a one-count in the ninth, the lone knockdown of the scrap.

Although Montgomery had been a heavy favorite, the bout was one of the most lop-sided staged in the garden in many months.

The United Press score sheet credited Montgomery with but two rounds, the third and fourth. All the rest went to the champion, many by wide margins.

Tonight's defeat will cost Montgomery a shot at Angott's light weight crown. Instead, Allie Stolz, of Newark, N. J., will get the title chance, Promoter Mike Jacobs said after the bout.

At the end of the tenth round, Montgomery was so bewildered that he walked to Angott's corner, thinking that the bout was finished.

7 Maryland Boxers In Eastern Semifinals

Army Qualifies 4, Virginia 3 In Eastern Title Bouts; Jenson Wins

By Ben Dulaney
Post Sports Editor

Memorial Gymnasium, Charlottesville, Va., March 6.—There were 18 fights here tonight as the Eastern Inter-Collegiate Boxing Tournament began and mighty Virginia and mighty Army—the favorites took a considerable beating. Seven of the lightly-regarded boys from Maryland landed in the semifinals to be held tomorrow afternoon.

Penn State placed six in the semi-finals and Syracuse five. Army and the Coast Guard Academy had four survivors each. The Cavaliers, hosts and cofavorites to win, managed to edge in but three men—two of them by byes. Western Maryland, other entrant, had three fighters in the running also.

Virginia's last hope of serious competition faded in the last bout of the night when Sigrid Jenson, of Western Maryland, landed a series of powerful rights upon Milton Parlow's jaw and finally downed the heavyweight for good midway in the second round.

Some 3300 saw the preliminaries here tonight. All winners and those receiving byes fight in the semifinals tomorrow afternoon. The finals are tomorrow night.

Happenings of the Evening

Here are some of the things that happened:

Virginia's hitherto undefeated captain, Kenneth Rathbun, was winning his fight with Julius Kuno, of Syracuse, but Rathbun eliminated himself by so doing.

Referee Steve Haliako stopped the battle at 1:30 of the first round because Rathbun's right eye was bleeding badly. The Virginian had all but blasted Kuno out of the ring up to that time. But the intercollegiate rules are intercollegiate rules.

Loren Schoff, Syracuse's great 145-pounder, had won 26 straight collegiate fights. Undefeated in college competition, he was defending the Eastern intercollegiate title for the second time. He met Bob Baird, of Penn State. He had so beaten the champion that it left no argument from the Syracuse boys in the press box.

Maryland's Joe Cicala avenged a January beating by decisioning Virginia's Francis Thomason in the bantamweight class. For a 120-pound fight it was pretty wonder-

Little Hoyas And Bethesda Fives Advance

Bethesda-Chevy Chase and Georgetown Prep advanced to the semifinals of the tenth annual Metropolitan scholastic tournament last night in battles at the Tech High gym. Bethesda ran up a 52-29 count on Montgomery-Blair while the Little Hoyas downed Bladensburg, 47-34.

In Monday's battles, Bethesda faces St. John's and G. U. Prep tackles Washington and Lee High.

Bethesda ran up a 21-12 count in the first half and held its ardent rivals safe while Bladensburg never was a match for the brand of court play shown by the Prep boys.

Oral Hildebrand Sold to Indianapolis

Toronto, March 6 (AP).—Sale of Veteran Pitcher Oral Hildebrand to Indianapolis of the American Association was announced today by Lee MacPhail, general manager of the Toronto Maple Leafs of the International League.

Hildebrand, who was turned over to Toronto by Pittsburgh of the National League, asked a salary far higher than the Toronto club figured he was worth.

Eagles Swamp Olympics, 12-1, Before 3003

By Jack Munhall

With their most one-sided victory in three years the defending champion Washington Eagles last night ended their regular Eastern Amateur Hockey League schedule at Riverside Stadium on the resounding note of a 12-to-1 triumph over the Boston Olympics.

With this latest convincing walloping of their favorite "cousins," the Eagles clinched fourth place lead over the Baltimore Orioles as they headed into a quartet of road games which will close their campaign. It was Washington's sixth victory against two losses and a tie with Boston.

The season's third largest crowd at Riverside Stadium—3003 fans—watched Les Hickey with four goals and two assists and Kenney Ullyot, with four assists, and two goals, spark Washington's fourth straight home success.

Eagles Continue Hot Pace

The Eagles' 12 points, while not as high as their best previous total—14 against Baltimore early this season—represented their biggest victory margin since starting competition here in 1939-40. The 12 points also ran the team's red-hot scoring here to 32 for three matches, including a 12-5 conquest of Johnstown and a 9-3 lacing of Atlantic City Tuesday.

Craig McClelland, whose goal tending has been a feature of the Eagles' belated drive, narrowly missed a shutout. The Olympics lone goal came on Gerry Des Rosiers' shot at 14:15 of the second period. Des Rosiers is one of the few survivors of the Boston squad which has been wrecked by injuries and the promotion of star players to the National League.

Weaver in Fight

The clever little French-Canadian got in all alone on McClelland to sink his shot after a double feint which left the Washington goalie prostrate.

The Eagles, their teamwork excellent, scored twice in the first period, six times in the second period (an

Stranahan and Bright Win Amateur 4-Ball

Coral Gables, Fla., March 6 (AP).—Frank Stranahan, Toledo schoolboy, and Morton Bright, of Atlanta, won the ninth annual Miami Biltmore amateur four-ball golf championship, 1 up, today on the thirty-eighth hole of their match with two battling Miami dark horses.

Ed Barrow Warns Star To Sign Up

N. Y. Head Increases Last Year's Salary By $3000; 5 Others Still Out of Fold

By the United Press

New York, March 6.—President Ed Barrow of the New York Yankees told the United Press tonight that Joe DiMaggio had refused a $40,000 offer for 1942 and that "this absolutely is our last and final offer."

"I sent him a contract last Wednesday and he called me today from Florida and told me that he would not sign it," Barrow said.

"This absolutely is our last and final offer—$40,000."

DiMaggio, a key slugger in the heavy-hitting line-up of the world champions, received $37,000 last season. He supposedly was holding out for $45,000 in 1942.

The first contract sent him this year called for the same pay as last season. Barrow revealed today that he had upped the ante $3000.

Five other key players still are holding out. They include: Joe Gordon, Bill Dickey, Charley Keller, Red Ruffing and Red Rolfe.

Barrow announced that he would give out "all the dope" on salaries of the unsigned players at the Yanks' St. Petersburg, Fla., training camp Thursday.

Camp Blanding Boys Offer DiMaggio $21

New York, March 6 (U.P.).—The following wire, signed "The Texas Boys" and sent from Camp Blanding, Fla., was received by the United Press today:

"Would appreciate your conveying following to Joe Di Maggio in the event the Yankees don't kick in more than $37,000.

"We cordially invite you to a tryout with the 1436 Infantry, Thirty-sixth Division—the fightingest regiment in this man's Army.

"The pay is only $21 per month, but that is better than nothing. Please advise.

"P. S.—We would settle for last year's salary."

Yanks Beat Cards, 8-7

St. Petersburg, Fla., March 6 (AP).—The New York Yankees of the American League won their first spring training game today, 8 to 7, in 10 innings, defeating the St. Louis Cardinals of the National League with a run scored on an error.

After the Cardinals had tied the count on a three-run outburst in the seventh, both teams went scoreless until the tenth.

With one away, Buddy Rosar batted for Pitcher Mel Queen and singled to right, and Phil Rizzuto, who had homered in the five-run fourth, singled to left.

Buddy Hassett grounded to Shortstop Mart Marion, who tossed to Bob Blattner, forcing Rizzuto. Blattner's throw to Ray Sanders was in the dirt and escapd the first-baseman, permitting Rosar to scamper home.

Dodgers Down Cubans

Havana, March 6 (AP).—The Brooklyn Dodgers defeated a Cuban all-star team, 6 to 4, in 11 innings today and Manager Leo Durocher was chased out of the park for the first time this season.

Durocher in English and Umpire Amado Maestri in Spanish bawled at each other for several minutes after Rodriguez stepped outside the batters' box to bunt. He could have been caught at first but Burge dropped the ball.

Durocher and his aide, Clyde Sukeforth, immediately got into an argument with the umpire. The argument was getting nowhere when Durocher began shoving the ump. He understood that and Leo and Sukeforth were put out of the park.

The argument came in the ninth inning. The bunter eventually scored to tie the game.

In the eleventh, pinch hitter Howell walked, Gelbert got on by an error, Riggs singled to score

N. C. State and Duke In Conference Finals

By the Associated Press

Raleigh, N. C., March 6.—William and Mary just couldn't do it two nights in a row—so the Sovereigns met sudden death tonight, a victim of their own poison, in a semifinal game of the Southern Conference championship basketball tournament.

The lads from Virginia, every one a long-shot artist, were eliminated by N. C. State on a beautiful basket by little Buckwheat Carvalho, with just eight seconds to go. The score was 53-52.

Duke, which eliminated Wake Forest, 54-45, earlier tonight, will meet North Carolina State tomorrow night in the tournament final.

Last night, after trailing by 16 points midway the last half, William and Mary eliminated George Washington with one of the most amazing rallies ever seen here.

Tonight the shoe was on the other foot. The Sovereigns led State, 29-28, at the half, and played the locals on even terms for ten minutes of the second half.

State then staged a rally, and went out front at 49-40, with only four minutes to go.

Once again, William and Mary began its now-famous garrison finish, and with one minute to go, Jack Freeman sank a basket, which gave the Virginians a 1-point lead, at 52-51.

But with eight seconds remaining, Carvalho dribbled in from the right and made the basket which put the contest on ice.

Al Vandeweghe, sophomore Sovereign guard, was the best long-shot artist seen so far in the tournament. From midcourt, from the sides, from all over the floor, Al dropped them in. He was particularly hot during the first half, when he made seven field goals and one foul shot, and paced the scorers with a total of 19 points for the entire game.

Glenn Knox, hero of William and Mary's win over George Washington, was tied with Bones McKinney, of State, with 16 points.

The first half of the Duke-Wake Forest contest was close all the way—but the Deacons couldn't stand the pace and slowed down considerably in the second half.

Cline was high scorer with 20 points.

Bill Jurges Signs Giants' Contract; Is Made Captain

By the Associated Press

Miami, Fla., March 6.—Shortstop Billy Jurges, who found trouble coming to terms with the New York Giants, signed his contract late today—and immediately was named team captain.

Provisions were not made public.

Jurges succeeds Mel Ott, the new manager, as captain.

While Jurges was romping through his workout, big John Mize was doing a bit of marathon running in the outfield. Trainer Doc Ferguson reported that the tendon taped in place in Mize's right arm would be fit for throwing in another 24 hours.

Ott, however, said Mize would do no throwing until Monday.

Georgia Tainter Is Golf Finalist

Ormond Beach, Fla., March 6 (AP).—Georgia Tainter, of Fargo, N. Dak., moved nearer her goal of winning four of the five tournaments she has played this winter when she swept into the finals of the South Atlantic women's golf event today by a 2-and-1 victory over Mrs. Maurice Glick, of Baltimore.

Miss Tainter's finalist opponent tomorrow will be Jane Crum, of Orangeburg, S. C., who defeated Ann Fink, of New Rochelle, N. Y., today, 1 up.

Milt Aron's Funeral Set for Next Monday

Chicago, March 6 (INS).—Funeral services will be held Monday for Milt Aron, Chicago welterweight and a onetime championship contender.

Aron, who was 25, died last night of a blood ailment from which he had suffered for five months.

Aron began his ring career in 1936 and in 1940 was believed headed for the welterweight title when he knocked out Fritzie Zivic. But last September Zivic evened the score, knocking out Aron in a Pittsburgh fight. Shortly after Aron developed the illness from which he died.

Kansas Clinches Big Six Crown

Lawrence, Kans., March 6 (AP).—Kansas University clinched a tie with Oklahoma for first place in the Big Six Conference basketball race tonight by defeating Missouri, 67 to 44, falling one point short of equalling the conference scoring record.

The Jayhawks went scoreless the first 6 minutes and trailed until 5 minutes before the first half ended. Then they spurted to take a 22 to 15 lead at the intermission.

The conference scoring record of 68 points was established by Oklahoma in 1934. Kansas score tonight was the highest piled up in the Big Six Conference this season.

Nativity Beaten By St. Martin's

The favorite St. Martin's five routed Nativity, 30-12, in a St. John's League tournament last night. In other clashes, St. Aloysius downed St. James, 22-18; St. Joseph's beat Holy Name, 20-19, and St. Gabriel's forfeited to St. Anthony's.

Ohio State's Wright Cracks Hurdle Mark

By the Associated Press

Chicago, March 6.—Bob Wright of Ohio State tonight bettered the American indoor record for the 70-yard low hurdles in the preliminaries of the Western Conference meet.

He skimmed over the barriers in 7.8 seconds at the University of Chicago fieldhouse.

His performance also established a new Big Ten record, replacing the mark of 7.9 seconds—which was listed as the best American and conference standard for the event—set by Don Olsen of Illinois at Purdue last year. Olsen duplicated his 7.9 feat tonight in winning one semifinal heat.

Another meet record was written into the books as sophomore Lee Farmer of Iowa soared 23 feet 2¼ inches in the broad jump. The old record of 22 feet 7⅞ inches was established by Burnett of Indiana last year.

The finals will be held tomorrow night.

Snead Wins Third St. Petersburg Title; Harbert Gets Record 66

By the Associated Press

St. Petersburg, Fla., March 6.—Sam Snead, the Hot Springs, Va., slugger with a reputation for repeating over favorite courses, blazed a two-under-par 70 over the Lakewood Country Club Course late today to capture his third St. Petersburg Open title in four years.

He had shot a mediocre 75 during the morning to give him a three-day card of 141, 75-70—288, three strokes better than any of his nearest rivals in the field of approximately 50 golfers who finished the grind.

Harbert Gets 66

Although Snead's sizzling final round assured him the first prize of $1000 out of the $3000 purse put up for the pros, it was overshadowed by a record-breaking 66, six under par, turned in by young Chick Harbert, of Battle Creek, Mich., as he swooped into a three-way tie for second place and a $565.33 award.

Harbert had encountered trouble yesterday after shooting a 73 Wednesday and came up to the last day apparently out of the running with a 149, eight strokes back of Snead.

However, he collected a 74 in the morning round and then played what he called the finest round of golf in his life in the afternoon—bagging a total of 7 birdies. He had a bogey 6 on the long second hole when his tee shot went out of bounds, but made up for the lapse the rest of the way.

First at Course

It was the first 66 made over the tough Lakewood layout since the course was lengthened to a par 72.

Tied with Harbert were Sam Byrd, of Ardmore, Pa., the former Yankee baseballer, and Lord Byron Nelson, of Toledo, Ohio, each of whom finished with 70s for 289.

Al Brosch, young red-headed pro at Bethpage State Park, Farmingdale, N. Y., who was tied with Snead for the lead with 216 at the three-quarter post at noon, finished with a 74 to take fifth money of $375.

Scores up to 300 finished in the money, due partly, perhaps to the disqualification of Ben Hogan and Henry Picard yesterday. Paul Runyan was just out with 301 and National Open Champion Craig Wood

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, Mar. 6.—If Ted Williams comes to your town this year, give him a break. The kid's okay. He's taken a lot of unfair abuse. Reports from Boston fans that they plan to put the blast on him, let's hope, are just reports.

CONSIDINE

We happen to know that Williams has been the main support of his mother, father and brother for some time. He should be 3-A and was 3-A until some busybody in San Diego clipped out a newspaper item, quoting his mother as saying she'd be proud to see her boy Ted in uniform, and sent it to his Minneapolis draft board.

Ted knew nothing about the reason for his reclassification from 3-A to 1-A at the time. As a matter of fact, he was all set to shrug off his baseball career and go into the Army as a private. He didn't want a commission. All he wanted was to be placed in "B Company." He explained, "You know, B there when they leave and B there when they come back."

However, a question arose in Minneapolis as to whether he should have been reclassified. H. W. Estrem, appeal agent for the Minneapolis board, opened a one-man investigation of Ted's case. And soon was convinced that if Ted went into the Army, his folks would suffer.

Told to Get Lawyer

Ted was so informed and advised to send a lawyer to Col. J. E. Nelson, chief of the Minnesota State draft board. Nelson told the lawyer that the proper procedure, in view of the apparent mixup, was to have Ted make a personal appeal, through Estrem. Estrem, in turn, would present the appeal to Nelson, who in turn send it on to the Presidential appeal board.

Williams simply wanted to straighten out what was by then a grand mix-up. He went to Estrem, answered Estrem's questions without embellishment, and—as you know—the Presidential board dropped him back to 3-A.

Immediately there was a storm. He was belted around in print and he began to fear that his baseball career might have suffered beyond repair. Estrem rushed to his defense. "Williams brought no pressure to bear on me to reopen this case," Estrem stated. "Ted only wanted to clear up the case. He had to make the request as a matter of routine."

Nelson promptly rushed to print to say that Williams had indeed sought deferment. Estrem came back to say, "I regret that the request angle has been emphasized. It should be stressed that Williams consented to the appeal. The word 'requested' is too strong for this case. I might add that Williams' attitude was never persuasive. Of course, the boy wants to play baseball, but he would go off to war in a minute if he thought he wasn't entitled to 3-A."

All of which, I believe, is true.

Others in Mix-Ups

These are tough times for athletes. Let's be fair. Selective Service mix-ups and applications for reclassification are made by the hundreds each day. Joe Doakes, the plumber, has these troubles, and so does Johnny Bananas, the fruit peddler. And no attention is paid to them. Or, if attention is paid, Joe and Johnny usually get the benefit of the doubt.

Draft boards are darn decent, honest tribunals. When one of them makes Ted Williams 3-A, then, by gosh, he's 3-A, and it doesn't behoove any of us to doubt it, just because he happens to be a .400 hitter who is scheduled to make a good salary this coming year. Everyone with good sense knows that if this country is any more beset than it is, Williams and all the other players will be right up there in front. Ahead, we suspect, of the types of dopes who would dare criticize this boy.

Here's hoping Williams has another .400 season.

Here's hoping that he takes time off at night, or before games, to appear at Army camps and USO clubhouses, to talk to the boys in that cracker-barrel twang he has.

Here's hoping he does his bit toward making his bosses, and the other owners in baseball, realize that they must do something big to overcome the effects of stories like the Williams story—even if it was unjust. Baseball must give more than two All-Star games to the war cause. We think that one day each week ought to be set aside, as Victory Day, and that every quarter that passes through the turnstiles of every ball park in the United States that day, should be turned over to the proper war chests.

Vernon to Bat in Clean-up Position for Nats

Stan Spence Also Figures As Key Player

Case to Lead Off Batting; Campbell In Third Spot; Mickey Hit .299

By a Staff Correspondent

Orlando, Fla., March 6.—Manager Bucky Harris came out of a huddle with himself today and brought forth what he presumed to be Washington's 1942 batting order in the American League. It features four left-handed batters in succession.

The cleanup hitting job has been bestowed upon Mickey Vernon, as befits his .299 average of last season and inasmuch as he is the closest thing to a .300 hitter on the club.

The line-up which Harris will send into the opening game follows:

George Case, leftfield.
Stan Spence, centerfield.
Bruce Campbell, rightfield.
Mickey Vernon, first base.
Jake Early, catcher.
Bob Repass, shortstop.
Stan Galle, third base.
Frank Croucher, second base.
Pitcher not named.

Case is in the same leadoff position he has held ever since he became a regular with the Nats three years ago. His ability to bunt and his speed on the bases have made him a valuable leadoff man and there has been no complaint with him in that role.

Spence Ideal

"Spence is the logical second-place hitter on this club," said Harris. "He's left-handed, hits to rightfield, bunts well and his speed up there at the top should be a big help to us. I think he's a better hitter than what he showed with the Red Sox, and he may have power enough to move down a notch in the batting order after the season starts."

Harris had little choice except Campbell as his third-place hitter.

Early Promoted

In stringing along with Vernon as his cleanup man, Harris is highly satisfied. The stringy first baseman was a consistent .300 hitter until the last day of last season when he slumped a point under that figure. He hit ten homers, with a generous sprinkling of doubles and triples and drove in more runs than anybody on the club save Cecil Travis. Jake Early is being promoted to the fifth place spot tentatively. Early, in batting .285 last year, hit in tough luck and appeals to Harris as a potential .300 hitter. He has adopted a new batting stance in training camp this spring, junking his former widely spraddled posture at the plate, and against batting practice pitching he has been an improved hitter.

After Early the club's batting potential drops off sharply. Repass was a .297 hitter in the American Association, but he knocked down no fences. Galle hit .284 with Milwaukee, and as the smallest player in the majors certainly does not represent power. Croucher, always a weak hitter, batted only .254 with the Tigers last season.

Four Must Deliver

"Spence, Campbell, Vernon and Early have got to give us our power," Harris observed. "If they don't hit well, we'll be in a fine mess, I suspect. The man who should be the most improved hitter in the lot is Spence. I always did think that if the Red Sox played him regularly he'd bat .300 for them."

Clark Griffith tomorrow will issue a formal statement on his holdout battle with Pitcher Dutch Leonard. . . . Harris is sticking to his plans of pitching rookie Ray Scarborough, Steve Sundra and Walter Masterson against the Yankees in the opening exhibition game Monday at Tinker Field. . . . The Yankees won't be at full strength with Joe DiMaggio and Joe Gordon still holding out. . . . Jake Early is the pool playing champion of the Nats' camp. . . . "I know where you spent the winter," Manager Bucky Harris told Early after taking a beating from the catcher on the pool table.

Penn State Aims for Title In I.C. 4-A

By the Associated Press

New York, March 6.—New York Colleges' domination of the I. C. A. A. A. indoor track and field championships get their most serious challenge since Yale won in 1933 when 44 colleges meet tomorrow night at Madison Square Garden.

This time, Fordham's defending champions and favorites, are menaced by Penn State, which never has won an I. C. 4A title. Fordham has most of its last year's keymen back, including John Campbell, 600-yard titleholder and Ed Shine, running in the same event; Frank Leary and Joe Nowicki in the 1000; Arthur Schmidlein in the 2-mile; Bernie Millham, high jump; Joe Sabasteanski and Ed Sladowski in the weight throw and its two relay teams, which have won ten of 14 races this season.

Ewell Chief Hope

Penn State's bid is built around Norwood (Barney) Ewell, who won both the sprint and broad jump two years ago as a sophomore and has swept all his board races this year. To go with him, the Nittany Lions have John Glenn, cofavorite in the high jump and possibly point winners in a half-dozen other events.

New Hampshire also figures to have a double winner in A. Richmond (Boo) Morcom, sophomore, who won the A. A. U. pole vault title last week and has high jumped 6 feet 6 inches. Georgetown, Pittsburgh and possibly Yale and Dartmouth likewise expect to be strong contenders for the team crown.

Blozis Is Standout

Although the team championship, rather than individual performance, is the prime objective of the athletes, New York U.'s Leslie MacMitchell and Georgetown's Al Blozis stand out as possible record breakers. MacMitchell, whose winning streak was broken by Gil Dodds in a 4:08.7 mile at the A. A. U. games, will attempt to lower his championship mark of 4:12. Blozis heaved the shot to a new indoor standard of 57 feet ¾ inch last Saturday and the use of an iron ball instead of the leather-covered missle should be to his advantage.

In addition to Campbell, MacMitchell and Blozis, defending champions back are Mike Prohodsky, of Northeastern, 2 miles; Norman Wilcox, Rhode Island State, weight throw, and Warren Broemel, Columbia; Doyle Rhoades, of Pitt, and Frank Cromwell, of Rhode Island State, who figured in a five-way split of the pole vault. St. John's mile relay and Fordham's 2-mile relay teams also are out to repeat last year's triumphs. Harold Stickel, of Pitt, is down to defend his 60-yard laurels, but may be forced to withdraw because of a pulled tendon.

Lions Play Barons Tonight In Cleveland

Special Dispatch to The Post

Cleveland, March 6.—Washington's Lions, fighting to maintain a three-point third-place advantage, today awaited their crucial game with the western division leaders and defending champions, the Cleveland Barons, here tomorrow nigth.

Victory will mean an increase to five points the slim edge the Lions now hold on the Providence Reds, who tomorrow night meet the Hershey Bears at Hershey, Pa. A loss will cut the Lions' margin on the Reds to a single point and create a new importance for the Washingtonians' game with the Philadelphia Rockets back in the District Sunday night. That night Providence will be playing host to the Buffalo Bisons.

The Lions, who have only six games to play in the regular season and who are fighting desperately to gain the championship playoffs, failed to boost their lead last night at Indianapolis when they lost a tough 2-to-1 game to the second-place Capitols.

The D. C. team will leave directly after tomorrow night's game for Washington and the game with Philadelphia at Uline Arena.

Hoya Hockey Team Engages Navy Tonight

The undefeated Georgetown University ice hockey team meets the Navy Department six tonight at 8:30 at Riverside Stadium.

The Hoyas who breezed through their collegiate competition with absolutely no trouble, will be bumping up against a puzzling foe in the Navy bunch.

Navy, with a squad claiming many former college stars, took a 11-to-2 trimming from Chet Adair's All-Stars last week. It was their second defeat in as many games.

This time, the Navy gang says, it'll be a different story; that they have a pair of capable goalies in Dean and Sumner Putnam, and also Lieut. (j. g.) James Sliney, another of their outstanding players who was absent from the scene of the All-Star debacle.

Another new Navy addition is Paul McConnell, 20-year-old enlisted man, attached to the school of music, who formerly played with a Milwaukee amateur team.

Some of the stars of Georgetown's crack outfit are John McQueeney, John Conway, Goalie Steve O'Neill, Bob Pender, Carl Routh, Jack Cassidy and John and Bill Bernet.

Referee for the match will be William Prividi, formerly an official in the National Hockey League, and in intercollegiatee and other amateur matches around New York. Prividi is employed by the War Department here as an expert clothing consultant.

Holy Cross, Madeira Teams Split Games

Holy Cross and Madeira School teams split in two games played yesterday with the Holy Cross Whites beating the Madeira Reds, 27 to 25, on the losers' court, and the Madeira Whites turning back the Holy Cross Purples, 37 to 4, on the Holy Cross court.

In the Madeira home game, Mary Ann Sheehan starred with 16 points for Holy Cross and in the other contests Miss Bruce, of Madeira, tallied 22 points.

Demaree Accepts Terms

Sanford, Fla., March 6 (AP).—The Boston Braves announced today Outfielder Frank Demaree had accepted terms for his 1942 contract and was leaving California tonight for Sanford. That left Shortstop Eddie Miller as the only unsigned player.

Western Maryland Routs Cards, 40 to 24; Eagles Swamped by Loyola, 61 to 34

By Bill Burnett
Post Staff Writer

Baltimore, March 6.—A pair of sound beatings ended the Mason-Dixon Conference title hopes of two Washington, D. C. college fives here tonight, sending the host Loyola College quintet and Western Maryland into tomorrow night's final game of the annual tournament.

Catholic University started the disastrous night for District basketeers, suffering a 40-24 battering at the hands of Western Maryland. The unhappy semifinals were wound up by American University as it took a 61-34 shellacking at the hands of a clowning Loyola five.

That latter defeat was by far the widest of the tourney. Loyola quickly jumped into a 18-8 lead, was out front by 31-17 at the half, and was still going strong at the end despite a display of all the fancy dribbling and shooting in the book.

Franny Bock, with 23 points, was the main reason for American's downfall, along with the seive-like structure of its zone defense. The red-headed half of Bock brothers was all over the floor and in the air. Whatever solace the Eagles got out of the game was in the efforts of Bing Byham, elongated center, who managed for 9 points despite a sever cold. Les Hewitt backed him slightly with 8 more points.

Victor over Randolph-Macon in the opening round Thursday night, 44-39, C. U. went into tonight's first scrap a sentimental favorite. It put up a game scrap for half the first period and then went too far behind to ever catch up. A small rally in the second half cut the Cards' deficit to six points, but that was the nearest they got. At the end the Terrors improved their margin at will.

With the outcome more or less decided by half time, interest surrounded the meeting of the conference's top two scorers, Catholic's Dick Scanlon and the Terrors' Ed Mogowski. Long before the end Scanlon, an all-District selection had proved his superiority.

Mogowski, who stole the M.-D. scoring crown from mild Dick with a late splurge, failed to last the game out as a matter of fact. In his attempts to guard his pivot rival he was charged with four faults and sent to the showers after only six minutes of the second half had elapsed.

Loss of their star, however, didn't stop the Terrors. Apparently in-

Purple Bows To Greenbelt

Greenbelt High displayed a strong brand of basketball in the second half to defeat Gonzaga, 31-26, and thereby avenge a defeat at the hands of the Purple earlier in the season. With Buck, Egli and Bozek doing the bulk of the scoring, Greenbelt drew out after trailing the Washington school, 15-11, at halftime.

Flynn and Jacobs were the only visitors to make more than one field goal.

In a preliminary, Hyattsbille Jayvees defeated Greenbelt's Jayvees, 15-14. Carrick led the winners.

Greenbelt closes its season next Friday night, meeting its ardent rival, Hyattsville High, in a battle on the All-Greenbelt High program.

Senate Beer won the opening of a best-two-out-of-three series for the Heurich League championships held last night in the Heurich gym by defeating Jacobsen's Florists, 44 to 35.

Lenny Mills' 19 points was high for Jacobsen's, and Ollie Tipton's 14 points were best for Senate. Senate held a 24-to-12 advantage at intermission.

In a lower-bracket game the Northeast Falcons defeated Petworth, 55 to 51.

Playground Kids Hold Annual Pin Tourney Today

The Community Center and Playgrounds Department will hold its annual boys bowling tourney this morning at the Lucky Strike Alleys, Fourteenth and Riggs Place Northwest, beginning at 9:30 a. m.

There are two classes of competition, juniors for boys 14 years and under and seniors for boys 17 years and under. For many of these "kids" this will be their first trip to a real bowling center and although many know the game it is their first time in a real tourney.

Last year, 52 teams competed with 270 boys in all taking part. This year the committee estimates between 55 and 60 teams from the 35 various grounds throughout the city. Each boy will roll three games with special recognition being given to high individual game, and set in each class. All boys who are interested in taking part in the tourney are urged to go to their nearest playground and sign up with the director.

Camilli to Captain Dodgers This Year

Havana, March 6 (AP).—President Larry MacPhail of the Brooklyn Dodgers referred to Dolph Camilli as team captain today, which was the first announcement the first baseman had been chosen for that post.

MacPhail made the announcement in a local program before departing for Miami, Fla., to await his Dodgers there next Monday.

Miller Upset By Corbin in A.A.U. Bout

Champions came through in grand style as the District A. A. U. Boxing Tournament moved through its third week of competition last night at Turner's Arena, racking up three knockouts to ward off potent challengers.

But there was one upset. John (Cotton) Corbin, Boys Club of Washington 118-pounder, smashed his way to a decision victory over Gene Miller, thereby avenging a loss to the same youngster in the recent Golden Gloves Tournament.

Chubby Charley Maimone, Golden Gloves middleweight champ, who is out to regain the A. A. U. title he held two years ago, came through in brilliant style after a stormy beginning, scoring a technical knockout over Herschel Todd in 1:59 of the second round.

The widely-heralded return match between Danny Petro, defending 118-pound champion, proved to be a re-run of their last meeting, Petro winning on a T. K. O. in the first round after stretching the veteran three times. Davis protested that he was all right but the referee saved him further damage by his timely action.

Dick Mullen, who hopes to take his 112-pound crown into the Army with him, had a tough time with clever and game Jim Jeanette before belting out that worthy in the third round.

One of the best scraps was the light-heavyweight engagement between Reno Workman, Golden Gloves title-holder and Roy Hubscher in which the former won by a clean knockout in two rounds.

Aircraft Workers See K.O. in 3:30 A. M. Show

Paterson, N. J., March 6 (AP).—A crowd of 1000 night-shift aircraft workers at an "owl" boxing show witnessed a thrill-packed 35-second bout at half-past three this morning.

Larry Lane, 180, of Trenton, one of the East's top lightheavyweights, had hardly answered the bell for the first round of a scheduled six when Bob Harris, 178, of Brooklyn, N. Y., felled him with a powerful right to the face.

Lane didn't wait for a count, clambered to his feet and landed the next blow, a terrific right, full on Harris's jaw. Harris went down for ten and out.

Stunning G. W. Loss Still the Talk of Raleigh Town . . . Other S. C. Notes

By Merrell W. Whittlesey
Post Staff Writer

Raleigh, N. C., March 6.—Southern Conference tournament notes:

George Washington's almost unbelievable defeat in the first round of the tournament here last night was by far the principal topic of the second day get-together of the coaches, athletic directors and officials attending the three-day courtfest.

Most of them agreed, and the writer will verify it, that the finish was the most complete reversal in many, many seasons. It was next to impossible for the badly beaten William and Mary team, behind 41 to 25 with less than eight minutes to play, to outscore the Colonials, 19 to 2, and win the ball game, 44 to 42.

Maryland's coaches attending the meeting, Jack Faber and Burton Shipley, left the auditorium when the score was 41-25 and with Virginia's Gus Tebell went back to their hotel. Faber turned the radio on when he reached his room and the game was just over and the announcer was saying "Leaving the score at 44 to 43 for William and Mary." Shipley said, "He must mean 43-34, George Washington; that guy is all bawled up." But the announcer repeated the score and Faber and Shipley were stunned.

According to George Lentz, the G. W. trainer, Matt Zunic and Joe Joe Gallagher sat on the bench in the improvised dressing room and sobbed for several minutes. Bobby Gilham just sat staring into space for fully ten minutes without speaking a word.

Coach Bill Reinhart told the boys he did not mind losing the ball game in that fashion as much as he did hate for his team to get beat by inferior opposition, a team that did not figure to beat the Colonials once a month.

It was a sorry ending for Matt Zunic's great basketball career at G. W., and one he will likely remember much longer than the many fine victories over the three-year career with Bobby Gilham and Roy McNeil, the other seniors. The G. W. boys were given the choice of going home or staying over for the remainder of the tournament. The unanimous answer was: "Let's get the hell out of this town" and they did.

This freshman question is creating a lot of talk, but that's about all, among the coaches and athletic directors of the conference schools, about 50 in all, who are in attendance.

The football coaches will meet tomorrow morning and are expected to prepare a petition to present to the conference head demanding a meeting of the voting members of the conference on the freshman situation.

Max Farrington and Reinhart, of George Washington, and Faber, of Maryland, are very much in favor of playing freshmen next season and even this spring if possible. The military schools in the conference are reported opposed to it while some of the schools with perennial weak teams say they will have to drop out of the conference if freshmen are not allowed to play. Carl Voyles, of William and Mary, wants permission to use his frosh against Harvard, Dartmouth, Navy and Oklahoma next year, even if not allowed to use them in the conference.

Farrington was attempting to line up nine schools to vote for the question which would give a 9-7 majority if the 16 member schools were called to meeting. Dean Hobbs, of North Carolina, president of the conference, recently sent a letter to all schools and reported only six wanted to call a meeting, two didn't care and eight saw no reason for it as they would vote against frosh in varsity competition. But sentiment here is that some of the eight have already changed their minds and others are just waiting for action among other major conferences.

George Washington has met William and Mary on two disastrous occasions this year. The Colonials lost to the Indians, 43-0, in football, for their worst beating in a decade, and then just when they were piling on revenge on the basketball court something happened. . . . Competing teams in the conference tournament just get expenses paid, with the profit going back to the treasury to pay for some of the nonprofit affairs. The famous conference Bar-B-Q tonight is the highlight of the social affairs of the tournament. The playoffs could stand a little color, such as music and entertainment between halves and games. As it is the fans just sit down, get two basketball games, and go home. Matt Zunic is unable to lift his right arm above his shoulder and was obviously playing under a handicap. George Washington was the favorite of many Carolinians to win the tournament. A lot of the anti-Dukes of whom there are many, figured they were the only team with a chance to beat the Blue Devils.

Headley's Pelisse Wins Southern Belle Purse at Hialeah

Brann Entry Finishes 2d And Third

Dark Discovery Runs Fourth as Favorite; Winner Is Ridden By Eddie Wielander

By the Associated Press

Hialeah Park, Fla., March 6.—Once again the form players had their troubles with the fickle fillies and mares here today. A half-dozen went postward in the featured Southern Belle purse. John A. Bell, jr.'s Dark Discovery, the favorite, finished fourth while H. P. Headley's Pelisse, after a long absence from the winners' circle, took the major share of the purse with ease.

Running better than in her four previous attempts at the meeting, Pelisse registered by three lengths under Apprentice Eddie Wielander, paying her backers $10.30 for two and running seven furlongs over a slow track in 1:25 1-5. W. L. Brann's entry of Moon Maiden and Challomine, second choice to Dark Discovery, accounted for the place and show as named, a half-length apart. Dark Discovery could only beat Verse and Pomiva.

By riding the winner, Wielander drew even with Willie Day for second place in the apprentice riders' standing for the meeting to date. These two boys, with 26 victories apiece, are trying to overtake Warren Mehrtens, who had 29 winners before losing his apprentice allowance February 21, for the prize awaiting the leading "bug" rider here.

Pelisse had all the speed of her field today. Breaking from the inside, the bay daughter of Pharamond II rushed into a lead of several lengths, with Moon Maiden a similar margin in front of Verse while chasing the eventual winner. Moon Maiden gained slightly through the next-to-last furlong, but Pelisse had plenty left and widened out again in the run to the wire. Challomine rallied and held Dark Discovery safe for the show award.

Selections at Hialeah

Dear Al,

Having used only Bowie publicity to date, I'm going to turn this column over to the Havre de Grace press agent:

Nominations for five stake races, one of them new, that will be contested here in the course of the coming spring meeting must be in the mail by midnight Monday—March 9. The Havre de Grace meeting will begin April 18 and continue through the 28. It will follow the opening session of the Southern Maryland Agricultural Association at Prince Georges Park, Bowie, and precede the Maryland Jockey Club's fortnight of sport at the old Pimlico course, in Baltimore, which will be marked by revivals of the Preakness Stakes and the Dixie Handicap. There will be close to three-quarters of a million dollars in purses for horsemen in this Maryland spring racing. The distribution here will be about $12,000 a day and Edward Burke will direct, with Charles McLennan serving as racing secretary and handicapper. Burke built the pleasantly situated Havre de Grace plant in six weeks' time back in 1912 and has managed local racing ever since. As a program maker and weight adjuster McLennan, who serves, also, in Florida and New England, is tops. After the Havre de Grace session Burke will go to Wilmington to prepare Delaware Park for the sixth summer meeting of five weeks of the Delaware Steeplechase and Race Association. The new Havre de Grace feature will be the Chesapeake Trial, a dash of 6 furlongs, for 3-year-olds, carrying an added money value of $2500, set for the first day of the meeting with the $3000 Harford, a handicap of 6 furlongs for 3-year-olds and over. The Chesapeake, a $15,000 gallop of 1 mile and a sixteenth for 3-year-olds, will be revived Saturday, April 18, and the Aberdeen, a $2500 breather of 4 furlongs and a half for 2-year-olds, Wednesday, the 22. The valedictory number will be the thirteenth Philadelphia, a $10,000 handicap of 1 mile and a sixteenth for 3-year-olds and over. It will feature the sport of Saturday, April 26. BILL.

First race—TRAPEZE ARTIST did everything asked last out and appears best of these routers gathered for the day's opener. ELEVENTH HOUR is fit and ready for the best. The entry of WHO REIGH and NAVARIN should get part of the pay.

Second race—THE SWALLOW and BY CONSCRIPT are a tight fit in this sprint. I prefer them in the order named. CLIP CLOP breaks off the rail and should account for the minor money.

Third race—The entry of MENEX and TELLMENOW seems to have the best chance in this dash for juveniles. The accent, of course, is on the first named. BIG TALK is slightly better than generally rated and belongs close. TRUE NORTH may be in the money circle.

Fourth race—AMPLE REWARD and BULLPEN, an entry, appear best in the second division of the juvenile stakes. Both have excellent form and I'm going to string along. ALL HOSS must be respected. WISE BOB was a longshot winner last out.

Fifth race—IN QUESTION has all the earmarks of a winner in this event. Needs only the right handling. CENTURY NOTE and BRIGHT TRACE to battle it out for place and show.

Sixth race—MARKET WISE is in top shape and seems to be on his luck in the bargain. I'm forced to string along with the favorite. CHALLEDON and PICTOR were carefully groomed for this big test and may get second money. ATTENTION seems best of the others.

Seventh race—WOOD ROBIN, with Conn McCreary to do the bolting, gets my call in this event. LLANERO and ROYAL MAN are sharp and ready for the best over a route they like.

Eighth race—MR. GRUNDY and GREEDAN is the way I prefer them in this effort. GALLANT PLAY is ready to run a strong race and might upset the other pair.

Ninth race—HERESHECOMES and SUERTERO may battle it out for the chief award in the day's finale. HOT IRON to show.

Best bet—MARKET WISE.

ful. Thomason went down momentarily in the second, then attempted to shoot the works in the third.

Bill Boswell, a Coast Guard boy from Washington, swapped punch for punch with Robert Peden, his much more experienced opponent from West Point, but Peden kept his year's record clear in the 135-pound class by taking a close decision.

Another Washington boy, Tom Jones, of Maryland, put up a mighty battle in the same class to turn back Sebastian Sgroi, of Syracuse. Jones sustained a bad facial cut early in the bout, but argued the referee out of stopping the thing and then rallied magnificently.

Maryland's undefeated Isadore Alperstein slid into the semifinals of the 145-pound decision easily when Bill Victor, of Virginia, forfeited because of a bad hand.

Mirabito Scores

Another defending champion, Salvatore (Call Me Toots) Mirabito, of Syracuse, scarcely lost his breath in subduing a game Army heavyweight named Ed Burdett. Mirabito packed a ruthless right in downing the Army boy at 1:21 of the second round and seemed almost a cinch to retain his title.

Maryland's Josh Hughes, who fought last year at 175 and who hasn't been in the ring once this season, turned up 20 pounds light and met William Richards, Penn State, in the 155-pound division. It was close, but Richards was awarded the decision.

A climax to Maryland's sweep through the other entrants came when an ungainly heavyweight named Milton Parlow, who slashed and smashed at Fred Goettel, of the Coast Guard, for a round and a half and finally floored him permanently with a mighty right to the chin.

Summaries:

127-POUND CLASS—Jess Pardela, Penn State, outpointed Jack Roland, Syracuse.

135-POUND CLASS—Bob Peden, Army, outpointed William Boswell, Coast Guard. Tom Jones, Maryland, outpointed Sebastian Sgroi, Syracuse.

145-POUND CLASS—Don Pence, Army, outpointed Howard Hall, Western Maryland. Robert Baird, Penn State, outpointed Loren Schoff, Syracuse.

165-POUND CLASS—Kenneth Rathbun, Virginia, outpointed Julius Kuno, Syracuse. (Rathbun's eyebrow in first round cut too badly for him to continue and Kuno advanced). Jack Gilmore, Maryland, technical knockout over Joseph McCormick, Penn State, one minute 52 seconds in third round.

Arvol Allen, Army, outpointed Frank Schmitz, Coast Guard.

175-POUND CLASS—McArdle, Syracuse, won T. K. O. over Clay, Army, 20 seconds of third round. Gunther, Maryland, bye. Emerson, Coast Guard, decisioned Ferguini, Penn State. Norman Rathbun, Virginia, bye. Cenci, Penn State, bye.

all-time record here) and four in the wild last session which saw a fist fight between Freddy Weaver, of Washington, and Sullivan, of Boston.

Washington scoring was confined to only four players, the aforesaid Hickey and Ullvot, and Marty Madore and Rollie McLenahan, each of whom fired two goals.

Both of McLenahan's goals were in the true McLenahan style—whistling from out around the blue line and literally burning their way into the nets.

Baranowski Out

Boston played without big Al Baranowski, the 200-pound defenseman who was hospitalized on his last appearance here by the roundhouse right of an unidentified, burly spectator. Baranowski suffered a broken right cheekbone and eye trouble which yet isn't cleared up. He is out for the rest of the season.

Weaver, whose jolting body-check by Baranowski was the start of the fracas which caused Baranowski injury the night of February 20, drew Washington's only penalty last night. That was of five minutes' duration for his exchange of fists with Sullivan, which ended as quickly as it flared in the third period.

Record Field Seeks Redland Bowl Today

18 Horses Seek Bowl In 4-Mile Jaunt; Two Other Events

Hardy hunters, who spend the blustery days of the winter months following the hounds, will have their innings today in the first outdoor competition, as far as horses are concerned, in the tenth annual point-to-point race of the Redland Hunt. The three-race program will be staged, starting at 2 o'clock, at the Laytonsville, Md., farm of Harry T. Blunt, jr. The public is invited but spectators are asked to bring a book for the soldiers and sailors.

Three races are on the program with the featured event, the Redland Bowl, placed in the finale position. The two chief races, the competition for the Redland Bowl and the Terpenning Cup Pair Race, have drawn a record number of entries. In the Bowl event, a field of 18 has been named with a possibility of two or more horses being post entries. The largest previous field was 11. Likewise, the seven "doubles" combinations sets a record for the Terpenning Cup battle.

Course Over 4 Miles

The races will be run over a course in excess of 4 miles and over a route as picturesque as near-by Maryland affords. With the exception of a half mile, the horses will be in view of spectators from start to finish. The Blunt Farm may be reached via Rockville by turning at Reed's Garage, or by taking Georgia Avenue extended to Olney, Md. The direction to the races is marked on both roads.

If you are looking for a half-mile race, or a 6-furlong affair or even one of a mile and an eighth, you will be disappointed. The sturdy hunt folks and their rugged mounts not only will run more than 4 miles but will have to negotiate 15 fences, averaging more than 3 feet 6 inches and cross a stream in the barg

Washington department store sales in the week ended February 28 continued at a merry clip, spurting 34 per cent above the same week last year. The gain in the four weeks ended February 28 was also 34 per cent over the 1941 period, according to the weekly report of the Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond.

Store sales in the Fifth Federal Reserve District as a whole were 40 per cent heavier in the latest week and 34 per cent improved for the four-week period.

Nationally, the Federal Reserve Board estimated that department-store sales in the week ended February 28 were 18 per cent more than in the corresponding week last year.

In the week ended February 21 sales were 15 per cent above last year, and in the four weeks ended February 28 they averaged 21 per cent more than in the similar period last year.

By Federal Reserve districts percentage increases last week were: Boston, 7; New York, 7; Philadelphia, 46; Cleveland, 24; Atlanta, 9; Chicago, 21; St. Louis, 21; Kansas City, 8; Dallas, 8, and San Francisco, 20 per cent.

Business Briefs Of D. C. Interest

Title Firm Changes Hands

The Title Guarantee and Trust Co. of Baltimore yesterday reported that the majority of its outstanding stock has been acquired by new interests. This stock was purchased from the Fidelity Trust Co.

One of the five members of the new group was Oliver M. Walker, of Walker & Dunlop, Inc., mortgage bankers of Washington and Baltimore. The other four members are Baltimoreans. All of the five new principals have been elected to the board of directors.

Herbert M. Brune, jr., was elected president at the same board meeting to fill temporarily the vacancy caused by the resignation of Edward L. Palmer, jr., who has resigned.

Airline Promotes Aide

American Airlines, Inc. announced the election of Hugh L. Smith as vice president in charge of operations. Smith was operations manager of American Airlines. A veteran flyer and air line operations executive, he learned to fly in the United States Army during the first World War, having enlisted in the Signal Corps.

Three Changes Listed

Three appointments affecting the executive staffs of the Washington and Baltimore offices of the American Automobile Insurance Co., of St. Louis, were announced yesterday. John A. Griffin, in charge of the company's Washington office, is returning to Baltimore to devote his full time to field contacts in both the Washington and Baltimore territories.

Succeeding him in charge of the Washington office, the company has named David I. Dary, formerly of Richmond. Also, Robert W. Blakeslee has been named supervisor of the liability and compensation department in the Baltimore office.

Store Employes' Pay Is Increased

Additional compensation amounting to 7½ per cent increase in pay to all Woodward & Lothrop Department Store employes has been voted by the company's board of trustees. The added pay was announced as "increased cost of living compensation."

The increase is effective for the week ended March 7, officials said. Initial distribution will be made, probably not later than the second week of April, for a four-week period of the weeks ending March 7, 14, 21 and 28.

For employes on a strictly commission basis, the 7½ per cent will be computed on commissions earned during the calendar month of March, when commissions are paid for sales made in March, and that percentage of monthly commissions thereafter.

The Outlook

Don't Throw Away Your Can Opener Yet; Tin Coating May Vanish, but Containers Won't

Take a good look at the "tin" cans on the grocer's shelves—there isn't as much tin there as might appear at first glance. And there'll be less as time goes on.

But don't throw away your can opener.

Although the tin coating may disappear from many cans, there will be close to as many cans, and more later.

Civilians may get fewer articles from the manufacturers who have clapped a can around everything from asparagus to tennis balls.

Our soldiers and sailors will get more. Some forces will even get their drinking water in cans.

The Japanese have cut off around 70 per cent of our normal tin sources. The 110,000 to 140,000 odd tons we have left must be spread more thinly—literally and figuratively—in military and essential civilian uses.

While the can factories are working faster than ever before, one executive said:

"I'll bet a nickel to a dollar that by the time this war is over there just won't be any 'tin' cans."

"Tin can," he explained, "is a misnomer; for less than 1-12 of the metal in the average can is tin; the rest is iron or steel. The tin coating is about .0008 of an inch thick—about 1-40 the thickness of a hair.

Now a variety of processes help spread tin farther. Lacquer coatings have become more general since the War Production Board, February 11, restricted tin's use.

One of the biggest problems of the research laboratories is the development of substitute coatings and steels treated to resist corrosion.

"We have reason to hope that the greatest achievements yet to be attained in our industrial history will come from the laboratories of American industry during the present war," Carle C. Conway, chairman of Continental Can, commented in his annual report.

Can making experts pointed out that their business originated with Napoleon's efforts to feed his armies far from home and grew with the Civil War, the Boer War and the first World War.

American Can Co.'s annual report said:

"The work done during the past several years in the company's laboratories will facilitate the substitution of black plate and electrolytic (much thinner) tin plate as substitutes for the standard so-called hot dip plates on containers for many products."

Fibreboard, plastics and glass containers, already more common, will increase if the can companies' supply of steel is cut. They use about two million tons a year.

A major packer now is putting into glass jars vegetables that formerly came only in cans.

"That's fine," one housewife commented. "Now I can see what I'm buying."

She probably will get more foods in glass, while the military forces continue to get cans. Glass can't take a buffeting like a tin can in traveling by train, ship, pack-mule and knapsack with the army.

Chicago Grain

Chicago, March 6 (AP).—Nervous grain price fluctuations today, winding up with a near steady close in most pits, reflected market unsettlement because of temporary suspension of wheat trading at Winnipeg and continued uncertainty about plans for disposal of domestic Government-owned stocks.

Wheat dipped about ⅛ cent at one time due largely to psychological reaction among traders when they discovered that the Winnipeg market had failed to open, except for trading in coarse grains. Later when wheat dealings were resumed there prices here rallied. The suspension at Winnipeg, where prices are far below Chicago, was due to arrangements to raise the Government guaranteed price to Canadian producers.

Wheat closed unchanged to ¼ lower compared with yesterday, May, 1.29⅛@1.29¼; July, 1.31@1.31½; corn, ⅛ off to ⅛ up; May, 88; July, 90¼; oats, ¼@⅜ lower; rye unchanged to ⅛ off; soybeans, ½@1 higher, and lard unchanged at the ceilings.

No trading in wheat futures at Winnipeg was permitted for more than an hour while exchange officials disclosed that the Canadian wheat board would increase the initial price to producers from the 1941 level of 70 cents a bushel. An Ottawa report indicated the 1942 guarantee may be 90 cents, basis No. 1 Northern at Fort William. Winnipeg futures closed unchanged, with May 79¼.

Reserve Bank Assails Loans To Pay Taxes

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

New York, March 6.—The Federal Reserve Bank of New York uses its current monthly review as a medium for speaking out against borrowings by individuals from banks to pay income taxes, against buying of defense bonds out of savings and against hoarding of currency as a hedge against inflation.

The bank points out, in discussing borrowings to pay income taxes, that one purpose of the higher taxes is the reduction of the volume of income which remains at the disposal of consumers for the purchases of consumers' goods, the production of which necessarily must be curtailed because of diversion of plants, materials and labor to war purposes.

Sees Purposes Defeated

"To have the volume of purchasing power that is absorbed by increased taxes replaced on any general scale by extension of bank credit through individuals' borrowings at banks," the bank says, "would be to defeat one of the purposes of higher income taxes. Therefore, it would appear that bank loans to individuals for the purpose of providing funds to make income tax payments should be limited to a role of aiding in the transition to a period of higher taxation, where there are special circumstances involved, and should not be of such scope as to encourage avoidance or postponement of a desired result of higher taxation, which is curtailed buying power of consumers."

While the bank finds borrowing by individuals to pay income taxes objectionable, it says that borrowings by some business concerns to meet tax payments may be unavoidable at this time because of the necessary utilization for working-capital purposes of cash realized from operations in 1941 and preceding years.

"Funds obtained through such borrowings," says the bank, "would not have the same effect as borrowing by individuals for the purpose of paying income taxes, but in general would represent merely a postponement of borrowing for working capital purposes by the temporary use of tax reserves."

The bank in discussing the defense savings bond program, makes a strong recommendation that the public buy bonds out of current income rather than accumulated savings, and it lashes out at those who have been hoarding currency as a hedge against inflation. It advises that the surplus currency in the hands of the public be used to buy defense bonds.

Urges Bond Investment

Of the various explanations that have been advanced as reasons for the hoarding of currency, the bank says, "none is more irrational than that which holds that currency is to be preferred to bank deposits or savings bonds, because an inflation may develop as a result of the war." Even if inflation should develop, the holder of currency would not have an advantage over the holder of savings bonds or of a bank deposit, the bank says, and, furthermore, the savings bond bears interest.

"With the Nation at war," the bank adds, "patriotism and self-interest alike, therefore, suggest that such money be put to work by investing it in United States savings bonds."

The buying of defense bonds out of savings may force the banks to sell Government securities, on the one hand, says the bank, and may defeat the purpose of bringing about reduction in consumer purchasing power, on the other.

"More emphasis on the purpose of United States savings bonds out of current income," the bank says, "and less emphasis on such purchases out of accumulated savings, which indirectly are already invested to a large degree, will aid in preventing the development of inflationary tendencies, as well as aid the Government in the aggregate task of financing the war."

Extend Credit To Little Firms, Bankers Urged

By the Associated Press

New York, March 6.—Loans to small manufacturers engaged in war work can be made safely, and it is preferable that such credit be extended by private banking sources, Charles B. Henderson, chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, said today.

HENDERSON

The head of the Government's big lending agency, talking to 1026 bankers from New England and the Middle Atlantic States assembled for a war credit clinic, under sponsorship of the American Bankers Association, said:

"It is preferable and desirable that these small manufacturers use the customary banking channels to finance their credit needs, for it is not the policy of the RFC to compete with banks and other lending institutions.

Cites RFC Experience

"It is our opinion that you can safely make these loans either in whole or in part. Our experience with them has been satisfactory.

"We have found that the method of accepting as collateral, or part collateral, an assignment . . . of monies due from the contract to be financed, when combined with the so-called budget-disbursement of the loan, is a practicable way to handle it.

"If, however, these enterprises are unable to obtain credit locally for this purpose, then only will the RFC consider their applications for direct loans, or in conjunction with their own banks under agreements to participate."

Pointing out the war effort was scheduled to require about one billion dollars a week, of which the Government must borrow about half, A. L. M. Wiggin, second vice president of the association, and president of the Bank of Hartlesville, S. C., asserted:

All Must Cooperate

"The chief bottleneck and the principal threat to financing the war in the ways that will accomplish the task and at the same time preserve the credit structure, is the failure, on the part of bankers and administrators of Government alike, to recognize the astronomical size of the financing job to be done.

"This financing cannot be done by the banking system alone, nor by the Federal Reserve System, nor by the agencies of Government.

"It is one that commands the full cooperative effort of all financing agencies, public and private."

Trade Quickens, Leading Stocks Slide $1-$4; New Lows for 4 or More Years Are Numerous

New York, March 6.—War news and tax questions remained as bearish denominators in today's stock market and many issues in the blue chip class fell 1 to 4 or more points, some to lowest levels in nearly four years.

The list was shaky at the start and, while scattered rails eventually came back moderately, selling was resumed after midday and most leaders closed at or around bottom for the day.

The Associated Press average of 60 stocks was off .9 of a point at 35.2, a new low since March 31, 1938. It was the widest day's recession since December 9. Volume picked up on the slide and transfers of 641,460 shares compared with 449,690 yesterday and were the largest since January 13.

The thought of reduced or deferred dividends as many big corporations prepare to pay the highest Federal imposts in their history brought out offerings in these issues and restricted bids for numerous others. Most carriers kept declines to minor amounts.

The fall of Batavia, it was suggested, may have been pretty well discounted marketwise, but the possibility of further bad news from Java, Burma and other international battlefronts over the weekend caused many potential bidders to retire.

American telephone was a weak spot throughout, and at the finish was off 4¼ points at 121. Others in the new low class with setbacks of 1 to more than 3 included United States Steel, United States Rubber preferred, Sears Roebuck J. I. Case, International Harvester, Westinghouse, Dow Chemical, Du Pont, Allied Chemical, Eastman Kodak, Standard Oil (N. J.), Texas Co., Liggett & Myers "B," Reynolds "B" senior issues of West Penn Electric were off 8 and 9 points on sales of a few shares.

In the downward shift also were Bethlehem, Union Pacific, Goodrich, North American, Consolidated Edison, Douglas Aircraft, United Aircraft, Kennecott, General Motors, Chrysler, Anaconda and Woolworth.

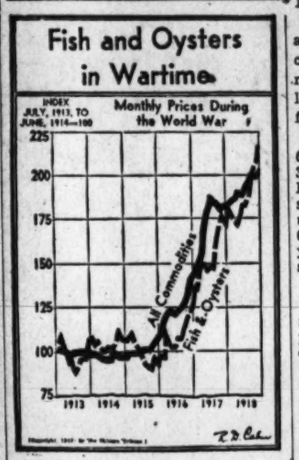
The market was one of the broadest for several months, 817 individual issues being traded. Of these 615 were down, 51 up and 151 unchanged.

Carrier bonds put up a fair show of resistance. Commodities were mixed. At Chicago wheat was unchanged to off ⅛ of a cent a bushel, corn ⅛ lower to up as much and hogs 10 to 15 cents higher. Cotton lost 20 to 35 cents a bale.

Empire Gas 6½ per cent preferred in the curb tumbled 15 points on a meager turnover and the company's 7 per cent stock was off 6. Other smaller minus signs were posted for Consolidated Gas of Baltimore, Bell Aircraft, Aluminum of America, American Gas and Gulf Oil. The aggregate here approximated 152,000 shares versus 91,000 Thursday.



New York Life Reports Sharp Business Gain

Special Dispatch to The Post

New York, March 6.—New York Life Insurance Co. recorded in 1941 the largest gain in insurance in force for any year since 1930 and had more than three million policies outstanding for the first time in its history, George L. Harrison, president, states in the ninety-seventh annual report. Insurance in force totaled $7,013,883,403 under 3,005,676 policies on December 31, a gain of $118,700,654.

New life insurance amounted to $446,614,300, an increase of $20,644,000 over 1940. Terminations by lapse and surrender decreased by $23,836,868, with the volume of terminations by lapse being the lowest in over 20 years.

New York Life's assets totaled $2,987,268,732 on December 31, which direct or fully guaranteed United States obligations constituted $887,761,424, or almost 30 per cent. This represents an increase of $89,060,113 during the year.

The company's liabilities, other than surplus funds held for general contingencies, aggregated $2,799,329,529. The reserve for insurance and annuity contracts is the largest single item of liabilities and amounted to $2,407,683,152.

Surplus funds held for general contingencies totaled $187,939,203, an increase of $10,865,599 during the year.

Payments to policyholders and beneficiaries amounted to $201,061,647 in 1931. Of this sum, New York Life paid $130,573,923 to living policyholders and $70,487,724 to the beneficiaries of those who died.

WPB Orders More Parts for Buses, Airlines

By the Associated Press

A program to produce parts to keep medium and heavy trucks, trailers and buses on the road was announced yesterday by the War Production Board, along with greater priority assistance to commercial air lines.

Higher preference ratings were granted to manufacturers of truck repair and maintenance equipment, and truck manufacturers were granted permission this year to make 150 per cent of the replacement parts sold by them in 1941.

A long-range program for spare-part production was necessary, WPB said, because of its orders halting output of trucks under 16,000 pounds on March 1, and its instructions that production of heavier vehicles must cease as soon as present stocks of fabricated and partly fabricated materials are exhausted.

Commercial airlines were granted high military priority ratings to assist them in obtaining delivery for new

Five Convicted In First Spy Trial of War

By the Associated Press

New York, March 6.—In a swift ending to the Nation's first espionage trial since the United States was plunged into war, five men and a woman were convicted as spies today by a Federal jury acting on the damaging testimony of a German-born girl and a mass of evidence produced by the F. B. I.

United States Attorney Mathias Correa, who presented the Government's case, hailed the verdict returned after 2 hours and 40 minutes as "a great victory for the cause of justice and democracy."

Samuel Inciardi, of defense counsel, declared in an address to the court that "I want you to know that we admire the great work done by the Federal Bureau of Investigation."

The six defendants, on trial since February 3, face maximum sentences of 20 years in prison. No death penalties are involved, since the espionage activities occurred before the American declaration of war.

Judge Henry W. Goddard said sentences would be imposed at 10:30 a. m. next Friday.

Chief witness for the Government was German-born Lucy Boehmler, 18-year-old blonde, who has pleaded guilty to another indictment, Hans Helmut Pagel, 20, a Brooklyn machinist who was a defendant at the start of the trial, pleaded guilty February 13. Both will also be sentenced Friday.

Sugar Benefit Payments Are Hit by Byrd

By the Associated Press

Senator Byrd (Democrat), of Virginia, asserting that sugar benefit payments are "non-essential spending," demanded yesterday that Secretary of Agriculture Wickard make no contracts for such payments until Congress could review existing sugar control legislation.

In a letter to the Secretary, Byrd said the chief justification for benefits in the past had been that sugar producers were to be compensated for a reduction in acreage.

"Now," Byrd wrote, "the situation has changed completely. We are facing a sugar shortage, and even now sugar is being rationed, with more drastic action to come.

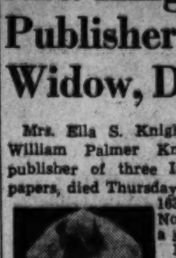
"Your department, for the year 1942, has removed the limitation on sugar production. If this had been done last year, at least a part of the present sugar shortage would have been avoided."

A request from Wickard for appropriation of $47,982,910 for sugar benefit payments is now pending before Congress.

At the Agriculture Department, there was no immediate comment from Wickard on Byrd's request. However, Department sugar experts said that if Congress failed to make the appropriation the result would be an increase of 100 to 180 million dollars a year in the sugar bill of American consumers.

Mrs. Knight, Publisher's Widow, Dies

Mrs. Ella S. Knight, widow of William Palmer Knight, former publisher of three Indiana newspapers, died Thursday at her home, 1639 R Street Northwest, after a short illness.



MRS. KNIGHT

Mrs. Knight was active in Washington charitable organizations and clubs. In 1921 she organized the District Sunshine and Community Society and served for many years as its president. She served on many national and District committees of the D. A. R. and was regent of the Constitutional Chapter for two terms.

She is survived by two daughters, Mrs. Fred G. Aulsbrook, of St. Petersburg, Fla., and Mrs. E. Richard Gasch, of Washington, and a grandson, Knight G. Aulsbrook, of New York.

Memorial services will be held Monday at 1:30 p. m. at Hysong's funeral home, 1300 N Street Northwest, by several of the organizations of which Mrs. Knight was a member. Funeral services will be held at 2 p. m. and burial will be in the Arlington Cemetery.

Lewis Reveals Organization Of Dairymen

By Ben W. Gilbert

Post Staff Writer

John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America, a C. I. O. affiliate, yesterday formally announced he had launched a drive to organize the Nation's three million dairy farmers and enroll them in the newly formed United Dairy Farmers division of District 50 of the U. M. W.

The mine leader's first public statement since he was rebuffed in his efforts to get the A. F. of L. and the C. I. O. to "accouple," indicated he was systematically moving ahead to conquer new fields.

His decision was announced at an unusual press conference attended by representatives of Michigan and New York dairy farmers, Lewis' daughter, Kathryn, secretary-treasurer of District 50, and Lewis himself. It followed a meeting of the Lewises and the farmers at which organizational details were worked out.

Reports that the Mine Workers had started to organize the dairy farmers have been received from time to time, but this was the first official announcement that the drive was going ahead full steam, supported by funds of the powerful U. M. W.

According to Miss Lewis, the decision to organize the farmers was made by "request" of the Michigan group. Once the Michigan group was accepted, "we felt it our duty to organize the other farmers," she said. District 50, technically devoted to coal by-products industries, has been organizing in other fields, including public utilities, chemical plants, coke, and even a cosmetics manufacturer with headquarters on Fifth Avenue, New York.

The farmers wanted "a union under the Lewis leadership of the kind and character of the United Mine Workers," she said.

This renewed organizing activity has given credence to reports that Lewis plans to split off from the C. I. O. and form a personal third labor movement, following the pattern of the split with the A. F. of L. in 1936 which gave birth to the C. I. O.

Lewis refused to comment on these reports yesterday, and Miss Lewis stated that the C. I. O. had been officially informed of the dairy farmers' organizing drive.

A statement indorsed by the group and read to reporters by Ralph H. Marlatt, organizing director of the United Dairy Farmers Division, stated the goal was to obtain "cost of production and a fair return for our labor" for dairy farmers.

"For years," the statement pointed out, "individual groups of farmers were played against each other with the result huge milk trusts made excessive profits that should have gone to the farmer."

Marlatt announced that 5400 members of the United Dairy Farmers Union of Michigan had already been admitted and that arrangements were being completed at the meeting to enroll 22,000 farmers in the New York milksheds. Scattered members in other States "east of the Dakotas" and in Canada bring the total enrollment of the new division of the Mine Workers up to 30,000, he said.

Would You Like to Date A Broadway Chorus Girl?

Most men at one time or another have gazed upon the front line of a chorus and dreamed of dating one of the chorines. What would happen if those dreams came true? The editors of Parade, the picture magazine section in Sunday's Post, asked themselves that question and then went to work. They arranged a date between a midwestern boy and a Broadway chorus girl. What happened after the introduction is shown in three pages of pictures in Parade in Sunday's Post.

Meet a WASHINGTON SECRETARY

During the past few months thousands of Americans have come to Washington to work for the Government. What kind of people are they? Do they like their work? In Sunday's Post Parade introduces you to one of Uncle Sam's new helpers . . . Miss Lou Landreth . . . shows you a typical day in the life of a Washington secretary.

Also in Parade . . . Picture-articles on the fighting Aussies from "Down Under"; the latest in fashions, slacks for women; the U. S. Army Truck School; and others.

What the doctor planned is still a mystery, for suddenly he crashed forward, a red stain spreading across his white shirt.

This was the murder Inspector Chris. McKee was called upon to solve. He found several persons with possible murder motives—and opportunities to strike in that dark room. He also found fierce tides of emotion, and a tangled romance that was not unwound until the mystery was solved.

Grin and Bear It

By Lichty

"Cadwell's been voting 'yes' on appropriations all afternoon—I just know he'll vote 'no' to any proposal I'll make to spend the evening."

Listen! with Glynn

To give you just a general idea of how Miss Meredith Howard gets around, we have merely to mention that within the past few weeks she has covered such diverse territory as Great Britain, Peru, Turkey, Mexico, China, Belgium, Poland, Ecuador, Venezuela, Cuba and Australia.

Of course, strictly speaking, if you want to cavil, Miss Howard, who conducts the Embassy Day luncheons at Hotel 2400 every Saturday—which in turn are broadcast over WJSV at 1:30—hasn't been to all those places. As a matter of fact, they've come to her,—in the persons of their legally appointed ambassadors.

For at every one of the luncheons, which are devoted to increasing good will among the remaining friendly nations, Miss Howard has had as her guest either the ambassador from one of those countries or another equally important person. And each of them has told how his country is contributing toward victory for the United Nations in the new World War.

Today, for instance, New Zealand is to be honored. And the guest of honor, who will extend his message over the air, is the Honorable Walter Nash, the Minister of that nation.

The "Embassy Luncheons" are contributing toward victory in another way, too. Each week 25 per cent of all the luncheon proceeds are devoted to the American Red Cross. It's pleasant to report that, with the terrific attendance the luncheons have been having recently, a $1000 defense bond was contributed to the organization from the proceeds just last week.

Contract Bridge

The bidding of today's hand is a good illustration of the psychological effect of a part score. East and West, with a chance to complete their part score and win a two-game rubber, refused to give up against opposition bidding and sailed into a three no-trump contract they ordinarily might not try for.

This question concerns your defense of this forced declaration. You are sitting North; East is the declarer, and your partner opens the spade four. You win the jack and return the suit, South taking the queen and leading a third round, drawing the ace. Declarer then plays the diamond ten from his hand and lets it ride.

Today's Hand

East-West Vulnerable
(40 Points Part Score)
SOUTH DEALER

	♠ J5 ♡ K542 ◇ K654 ♣ KQ4
♠ 109 ♡ A3 ◇ AQJ9 32 ♣ J102	NORTH WEST EAST SOUTH	♠ A65 ♡ J1098 ◇ 108 ♣ A953
	♠ KQ7432 ♡ Q76 ◇ 7 ♣ 765

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
Pass	1 ◇	Pass	1 ♡
1 ♠	2 ◇	3 ♠	Pass
Pass	3 ◇	Pass	Pass
3 ♠	Pass	Pass	3 NT
Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: 4 ♠.

When the ten of diamonds is led from the closed hand and finessed, North may win either the first or second diamond lead. He now must get partner in the lead to cash his good spades. South probably doesn't hold the club ace or he would have made a bid with six spades, including the king, queen, and so the heart suit offers the only possibility.

North, therefore, leads the heart king hoping his partner has the queen. With this defense, East must go down. He most likely will take the king with dummy's ace; if not, a small heart forces out the ace. Declarer can now win five diamonds and three aces for a total of eight tricks, but South must eventually gain the lead with the heart queen and take enough tricks to set the hand.
